Watering.

There is always the danger of watering vegetable crops over abundantly. Ontario has been fortunate this spring in the amount of natural watering that the gardens have received, but this does not necessarily apply all over Canada. A city garden should never be watered in the heat of the sun. In any event the water should be applied in as fine a spray as it is possible to obtain. Force will wash out the seeds, flatten the soil, expose the roots to the sun's rays and thus cause the wilting of the plant. As the seeds are breaking through the ground should be gently watered in the evening with the watering can. The hose is destructive if used too soon after planting. It is necessary to stir the soil after each rain or watering in order to conserve the moisture.

Particular care must be taken in the watering of transplanted vegetables. It is a good plan to put a little water in the holes before the plants are put in them. Or, on the other hand, the watering may be done immediately after planting, while the soil is still loose. This will prevent the plants from wilting.

Nearly every woman labors under the delusion that no man can tell her a lie and look her straight in the eye at the same time. Injustice often puts a man on the back, while justice kicks him.

CHAPTER LXXXIV.

We had a simple and very quiet dinner on the train, then, as we were all pretty well tired out, we went to bed. The train reached Moreland early in the morning, but I was awake long before it was time to get up. I lay thinking of David—how I should miss him. It had been a perfect joy to have him, in spite of my fear that he would feel that I was neglected and would tell mother so.

We had breakfast at home. Then, as soon as George had left for the office, David and I walked over to see Evelyn. She made us tell her all about our trip, and was delighted with the handkerchiefs I had brought her.

"I suppose you will be going away soon?" she said to me.

"Yes, in about ten days. I dread it."

"Isn't she foolish?" Evelyn said to David. "The idea of dreading a trip to Newport and Bar Harbor!"

"I, too, think your trip will be a nice one—your vacation, rather," David responded. "It will be awfully jolly to boat and fish."

"The boys are great for outdoors," I told her.

"Have you seen Merton lately?" she asked me. "I met him about three days ago, and he said he was in New York. He is anxious to work on the picture."

"I have a sitting today. Don't you and David want to walk up there with me and see how the picture is getting along? I'll telephone Celeste she needn't go with the today, if you will."

"I'd love to! Perhaps Merton will ask us to luncheon again. Have you met him?" she asked David.

"Yes, the first night I came. He seems to like Els. He said a lot about her picture and sort of bragged about her."

"You silly boy," I interrupted, embarrassed.

"Merton does like Helen. We all do," Evelyn said.

"Stop talking about me and come on. Merton will be cross if I am late." So, talking and laughing, we all three went to the studio.

"Do you suppose you can keep quiet, with so many looking at you?" Merton asked after he had greeted us, and scolded me a bit for running away.

"Oh, yes, I don't mind David, nor Evelyn, half as much as I do you," I confessed, then blushed furiously because I had said it.

"I . . . have missed . . . you," he said, so low that the others did not hear.

"I took the pose he suggested, my mind in a whirl. Why was I so pleased that he, Merton Gray, successful artist and popular man about town, should miss me?" I concluded it was because he had been the first, almost the only man, who had made me feel at ease when I first came to Moreland.

David and Evelyn sat in the low window looking at a book of etchings. The studio was very quiet when Robert, Merton's man, came in and spoke quietly to him. Merton frowned, but nodded assent. In a moment there was a soft rap, a swish of skirts and in came Madge Loring and Julia Collins.

The draperies at the window effectively hid David and Evelyn. I saw Mrs. Collins look around, then saw a sneering look, followed by one I could not understand. It was as if she were pleased at something. "I see you've dispensed with Celeste. I don't blame you," she said. "It is much more cozy here, by yourselves. Then, French maids aren't to be trusted."

"What do you mean?" I said quickly, my face flushing, my heart thumping as if it would burst.

"Oh, don't get excited! I only meant that even innocent things took on an air of romance to the French servant."

Suddenly I was very cool. I shook my head at Merton. He had been about to speak, to explain. I knew what was in his mind by the way he glanced toward the window.

"Yes, I think you are right," I said coldly, remembering how pleased Mrs. Sexton had been when I had come out ahead of Julia Collins once before by keeping cool. "And you surely should know, Celeste told me she had a friend who worked for you as private maid. And you know, French maids talk to each other."

Merton turned away to hide the smile trembling on his lips, and Mrs. Loring broke in:

"What are you two scrapping about? I can fairly see your claws, Julia."

"Oh, pardon me!" I exclaimed, "but I so want you to meet my brother, David!" I called, "Come and meet some of George's friends. My brother, David Milner, Mrs. Collins, and Mrs. Loring." I purposely spoke of him first, instead of following the correct manner of presentation. "And Evelyn, come out from behind those curtains! You know both ladies. If we had a French maid here, she would say that you and David had some sort of an affair, I am sure! Wouldn't she, Mrs. Collins?"

New Linens for the Dining Room Beautiful.

By KATHRYN MUTTERER.
Bespeaking the attention of needleworkers who go to lavish lengths to make the dining room one of the most beautiful rooms in the home are these new linens. They consist of a scarf and a center-piece of entirely new shape. Embroidery and laundry, the texture of the line becomes more pleasing and the charm of the decoration more pronounced.

Crocheted corners are a very effective means of ornamentation for scarves and center-pieces. The inner edges of the corners may be satin stitched, buttonhole or whipped to the linen, as preferred.

Equally appropriate for the library or living room would the pieces be if made of ecru linen, with the filet in natural color crocheted cotton.

Women who do a great deal of crocheting will find that crocheting from the center of a ball of cotton is much easier than from the outside. Remove the pasteboard from center of cotton; then take crocheting hook and carefully draw the thread from center of ball and the end can easily be found. Place ball in an envelope and use from this. The thread is always clean and never tangles. When copying a filet crocheting pattern from a working pattern, she use of an ordinary reading glass makes it easier to count the stitches and relieves the strain on the eyes.

Persons preparing gifts for prospective brides could not select any.

Embroidery No. 12446. Transfer pattern of scarf and center-piece, 25 cents.

Working pattern and directions, filet crocheting motifs, Nos. 87 and 90, 15 cents.
