The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

AT NARRAGANSETT

CHAPTER LXXXVII.

He had the drawing room and Mrs. Collins was in the parlor car. George spent most of his time either with her, or talking with some gentlemen he knew. I curled up in the corner of the seat and gave way to gloomy thoughts. I thought, "Then George came in with an armful of magazines and I resolutely opened one and read."

After luncheon, which Mrs. Collins shared, she brought her book and came in with me. I was terribly annoyed, but pretended to be indifferent.

"You'll excuse me, if I go right on reading?" I said coldly.

"Of course! I have an interesting story to read, also."

For over two hours we sat without speaking. Then George came in and, for the remainder of the journey, he and Mrs. Collins kept up a running fire of small talk.

We were to stay at the same hotel, so naturally George took charge of her luggage.

"It's easy for widows to travel, if they have some other woman's husband to look after them," I thought bitterly, as I stood waiting while he hunted up a piece of her luggage which she insisted must go to the hotel with her.

More Unpleasantness.

"Make yourself as attractive as you can," George said as he left me. "It won't take me long to dress. I'll be back in a minute."

It was gone some time. I was all dressed when he came in. The moment I saw his face, I knew he was displeased.

"Is that what you call making yourself attractive?" he asked, paying no attention to the maid.

"Why—am I not all right?" I had selected a dress of soft, white material, a little low in the neck. It was a dress I could have worn for a home dinner.

"Have you so few clothes that you must select that quakerish thing to appear in?" My eyes filled at his tone, and I turned away that he might not see the tears.

"I'll change, if you will tell me what you would like me to wear."

"There's no time to change!" (he had been dressing as he talked).

"Mrs. Collins will be waiting."

"Mrs. Collins! Was she to eat with us, too?"

I glanced into the mirror. Really, I looked very well. I choked back the tears, dabbed my face with powder, again, and waited. But when I saw Mrs. Collins and the other women, I realized how like a school-girl I must look. Such elaborate costumes, I never had seen. They were like the wonderful dancing frocks in my trunks. Too elaborate for a dinner, I thought.

"You are not dancing tonight?" Mrs. Collins asked, in oily tones, as we joined her.

"Dance—is there a dance?"

"Of course! You never have been to the casino, George tells me; you will be charmed. I adore it!"

Why had George not told me? Indignation flushed my cheeks, as I followed meekly behind them into the dining room. Could he have purposely allowed me to remain in ignorance. He was so proud, so impatient with me if I were not suitably dressed for each and every occasion, that I could not understand his not telling me about the dancing.

In some way I was sure Mrs. Collins was to blame. In just what way, I couldn't figure out. But in my own mind I was satisfied that it was so. I would not allow her to "crow over me," to use an old expression of David's.

"I shall, too, I am sure. You see I have been at home, always. All these things that are so familiar to you older women, are new to me. I too adore dancing, and if, when you are having your dessert, George," I turned to him—"I may be excused, I will be ready by the time you have finished. I forgot that you said we were to dance tonight."

The expression on George's face was so comical, I almost laughed. He knew as well as I did, that he had said nothing about dancing—and that I had simply said what I had for a reason. He returned gravely: "Certainly, Helen. But don't keep us waiting."

"Why do you change, Mrs. Howard? You look very like a debutante."

"But I am not a debutante. I am a married woman." I answered, smiling, but furious. She had called George by his first name; I, of course, was "Mrs. Howard."

I caught a look of anger, as it swept over her face, gone in a moment. I had baffled her plan to have me make my first appearance at the casino in improper costume. It gave me the added courage I needed. So that, when the waiter took our salad plates, I did not wait for George to order anything more, but rose and, again excusing myself, I left them.

The woman's committee of the Council of National Defense is acting as the clearing house for placing women in war work.

The first meeting of the woman's section of the Fatherland party in Berlin asked the government to drop peace negotiations.

The first woman food administrator is Miss Kathleen Mackin, chief of dietetics for the National Service school at Washington.

Street railway companies employing women as conductors assert they are more honest than men, but do not collect as many fares.

Many women's colleges are doing away with the commencement festivities to devote the money thus saved to war work.

When the historic Medico-Chirurgical hospital of Philadelphia graduated its final class consisting of 26 nurses recently, fifteen of them immediately entered the Red Cross work.

If wealthy women really desire world democracy they must undertake the stern task of abolishing poverty, according to Miss Julia Lathrop, chief of the children's bureau of the federal department of labor.

Agitation to secure the award of the Victoria Cross to women as well as men is being conducted in England. This decoration is the highest that can be awarded by the empire and no woman has yet received it.

War Garden Bulletin

Practical Daily Guide For Vacant Lot and Backyard Gardeners Enlisted in Great-er Production Campaign.

Issued by the Canada Food Board in collaboration with experts on the staff of the Dominion Experimental Farm.

Related Gardeners.

There are plenty of "eleventh hour" gardeners in Canada, and there is no reason why the belated amateur should be discouraged. Even if his neighbor is already using his lettuce and radishes he may still do his bit, and, assuredly, it is better late than never. Right up to the first of July even the so-called early seeds may be sown and no man or woman would call off because he or she thinks it is too late to make a start.

Weather and soil conditions vary all over the country and these bulletins do not pretend to be uniform for all our war gardeners. But cut them out and keep them on file. They will help you out and serve as constant reminders.

Perhaps you are feeling a little discouraged over your garden. It may be that you planted some garden seeds when the early birds came and they never sprouted. You cannot control the weather. Get busy again and give them another trial. Gardening is something like gambling, with the chances all in favor of winning. The one essential thing is that everyone should have a war garden of some kind and add to the country's food supply.

Slight Stroke of Paralysis

Down Left Side—Stomach and Heart Affected—Case Baffled Doctors For Three Years.

Trenton, Ont., June 1.—A very interesting report having been received from Mrs. Pringle in regard to her recovery from partial paralysis. This was a most extreme case, for doctors had been trying for three years to find something which would restore the depleted nerve force.

One can scarcely imagine stronger evidence of the restorative influence of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. C. Pringle, Queen street, Trenton, Ont., writes:

"About five years ago I was troubled with my stomach, there was a sort of paralyzed feeling across it and up my left side, and my heart seemed almost to stop beating. I called in the Doctor, and he thought it was symptoms of a stroke. My stomach kept getting worse. At times the pounding would be intense, almost unbearable, and I thought I would go wild. Sleep was out of the question. I tried different doctors, giving each one a fair trial, and doctoring nearly three years. My case seemed to baffle them. It was a nervous breakdown caused by overwork and worry. During all this time I could not do any work, and my friends thought it was a matter of time how long I would live. Some one advised me to try something to build up the system, and I tried different medicines. Finally I thought I would try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and see if they would do me any good. A famous doctor suggested my using these pills, and told me they would be good for me. They seemed to be just what I required, as I soon saw an improvement. I took about fifteen boxes, and the results have been very gratifying. I am now enjoying splendid health, and able to do all my work, eating anything I wish, and can go to bed and get a good night's rest. I have recommended Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to many of my friends, who have also secured good results from this treatment."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.75, at all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint.
