Sacrilegious Religion.

The Wall Street Journal.

The task of ministering to spiritual needs of our men on the other side is not easy, and those who undertake it must be especially well equipped mentally. Most of them apparently are, and much praise has been accorded them by their unusual congregations. Many orthodox Christians would hold up their hands in horror upon the scriptural elaborations presented by those chaplains and this can be appreciated from perusal of the following excerpt of a marine chaplain's sermon, delivered during a halt in the march to the front trenches.

"Boys," he said, "I know the Bible says if your enemy smites you on one cheek turn unto him the other, but it doesn't say that if he is about to try to stick a bayonet into you, you should turn your back on him. It also says love your enemies. I agree. I have seen many dead Hun and believe me, men there is nothing easier to do than to love a dead Hun. But never forget to pray. It eases the mind and gives you confidence. But between prayers fight like hell."

Dreams Come True.

Sir John Dickinson, the Bow street magistrate, recently told a story of his schoolboy friends. They talked of what they would like to become.

One said he would like to be a great soldier and win the V.C.; the second also wanted to be a great soldier and the third said, from beneath the bedclothes, that he would like to be a savage.

The first is now, said Sir John, a great general with the V.C.; the second led his men at a critical moment at Omdurman and saved the battle; the third is in the Australian bush, and almost a savage.

His Job.

The president of the Santa Fe Railroad, Edward Payson Taylor, recently ordered a totally deaf man to be employed. "For what position?" asked his general manager. "He's so deaf he can't hear thunder." "Exactly," said Mr. Ripley. "Let him listen to passengers' complaints."
