MRS. CLAYBORNE PAYS RUTH GENEROUSLY FOR HER WORK

CHAPTER XV.
 Finally the room was finished. Ruth had been South a month. At first Brian had written cheerfully, almost gaily, about keeping bachelor hall, etc. But the last two or three letters had told of his loneliness, and had wondered when she was coming back.

"You haven't left me for good, have you, dear?" he asked, pretending to joke, "because if you have, I shall meet the police on my way with orders to bring you back. But really, Ruth, I don't believe you have any idea of how lonely I am, or you would pack up and come by the next train. I can't bear to go home, lately; it grows more and more lonely without you."

"I really must go!" she told her aunt. "It was good of Brian to let me come, and I feel abominably selfish when I think of him there, all alone, while I am having a glorious time here and being waited on like I used to be. I reckon you all have most spoiled me again."

Her aunt did not urge her to remain. But she figured up what she would have paid a decorator for the work, and insisted that Ruth take a check for the same amount.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire," you know," she quoted.

"But I LOVED to do it!" Ruth returned. "And really would you have paid a really truly professional man all that?" the check was a large one. "Yes, perhaps more."

"This second parting was in some respects harder than the first had been. Ruth had so easily slipped back into the old groove; so readily fallen into her old habits of luxury, and had been so loving, as well as beloved, that they could not bear to see her go. Mamma Rachel, especially, lamented long and loudly. She had expected to return with Ruth from the moment she knew she was coming South. Her disappointment was very keen, and she took no pains to hide it. "It sho'ly ain't wicked, she ain't nothin' but a baby, and her all 'lone up N'oth."

Only Mrs. Clayborne said nothing. She fairly ached to keep her niece with her, to feel that once again she belonged to her, and to be happy. She noted the softness of her hands, the gloss on her hair, the look of perfect grooming which had always been associated with Ruth, and which had been absent when she came.

"How does she endure it?" she muttered. "She must love him very much."

Ruth did. As she drew near New York, she could scarcely wait to see Brian, to be clasped in his arms. It seemed to her that something must be the matter, she could not wait so long. If fairly appeared to cry, but finally they were in the station, the train stopped, and she saw Brian tall, handsome, distinguished-looking, waiting for her.

Clasped in his arms, regardless of who saw them, she told him how glad she was to be back, how she didn't believe she could ever leave him again, and many things that emotional people say at such times.

And Brian! He told her how he had missed her, how the days and nights were, each, forty-eight hours long. That he had considered committing suicide if she remained longer; and all the foolish things a man very much in love with his wife is apt to say.

They had dinner at a nice little restaurant. And as Mrs. Murphy had scrubbed and cleaned what was home coming was really quite a gay and festive affair. But the next morning, just as she was happily dreaming of some old castle which was to be redecorated, Brian woke her. "You'll have to hurry if I am to have any breakfast," he told her.

For a moment Ruth lay trying to realize where she was. It was only eight; then her coffee and bath. But this wasn't Aunt Laura's. This was home, her home and Brian's. So she sprang out of bed, threw on a kimono and hurried into the kitchen to the once more accustomed and unwelcome task of getting breakfast.

All day, Ruth's thoughts were very busy.

"I reckon, the first thing, we all will be hearing you have gone into business. I hear it is quite a fad up N'oth."

Peggy Sutton had all unconsciously set her thoughts in motion. Now they wandered on and on of their own volition. Try as she would, Ruth could not divert them into another channel.

She went to the drawer where she had her aunt had given her. She found it twice as much as Brian earns, even in his best months."

All through the day she wondered. "Why not?" she asked to herself. "Others do such things because it is a fad with them. Why not do it because it is necessary and—because you love it—had rather do it than—this?" looking around the kitchen, and, because of her straying thoughts, burning her arm as she lifted the potatoes from the stove.

"I believe I will!" a frightened look in her face. "I won't say anything to Brian until I see if anyone else is doing it. Then I can hire this expert that will help. Ugh—how I loathe it!" as, once again, she burned herself on the hot dish. To-morrow—Ruth considers Taking a Position So She Can Have a Servant.

Pointers on Potatoes.
 "Every cook boils and bakes potatoes, but not every one does it well. Here are some pointers from a food expert that will help. When you boil potatoes:
 Select potatoes of uniform size. Wash and scrub them thoroughly. Boil in the skin, unless potatoes are old and strong in taste. Soak the potato in cold water for several hours before cooking, if it is old and shrunken. Remove the thinnest possible layer of skin, if the potato is to be pared, and drop it into cold water. Cook in boiling salted water until tender. Drain thoroughly and par immediately. See that all steam is driven off by shaking over the fire, if necessary, so that the potato is dry and mealy. When you bake potatoes:
 Don't have your oven too hot. Don't have different sized potatoes. Don't put them into your oven dripping with cold water. Don't delay in getting them into your oven. Don't fall to allow from 45 minutes to an hour for a medium-sized (6 ounce) potato.

NO TAIN IN THE LAKES.
 Report on Beverly Fishing Grounds is Commendatory.
 Brockville, Aug. 27.—Complete examination of the Beverly Lakes fishing grounds on charges laid by Craig Miner, of New York, under the nom de plume of "Keokuk," that bass and pike in the lakes were diseased by pollution of the waters by sewage from the village of Delta, is offered by the report of Henry Watson, Provincial Game Warden, submitted to D. McDonald, Deputy Minister of Game and Fisheries. Mr. Watson, after thorough investigation of the lakes, finds that "all the fish in the upper Beverly are free from disease of any kind," and that while some of the fish in the lower Beverly are afflicted with sores, these sores are produced by a parasite and are not attributable to sewage.

A Baby's Skin

CHOICE OF COLORS

Blondes and Brunettes Demand Individual Shades.

Relation of Effect of Hues on Various Complexions Should Be Considered in Making Selections.

In costume the beauty of a color should not be considered alone, but in relation to the effect it has upon the complexion of the person who is to wear it, observes a fashion critic. The instinctive craving for color, is natural and should be gratified, but not at the sacrifice of harmonious appearance. There is no complexion, however, attractive or commonplace and uninteresting, but may be improved by a selection of the color best suited to the particular complexion.

Individuals fall in two general types, blonde and brunette, and each of these two types is again divided into several types. The combination of the complexion with the various hues of hair, and the color in the eyes, is what makes a person's appearance distinctive and interesting. The wide difference in the complexions of blondes and brunettes makes it impossible for them to wear the same hues. Each season brings certain popular colors, and blondes and brunettes alike rush for them regardless of the effect these colors have upon their complexion. Color has the same effect upon complexion that certain chemicals have upon water. For example, certain hues of red will bring out the yellow in the face of one blonde, while in the faces of others it emphasizes green or perhaps purple, or makes one ashen, the color of the eye fading, and the hair becoming dusty looking, and lustreless. Because of the marked difference in types and because color affects each individual differently, no set rule can be given for the choice of harmonious colors. The right choice of color is largely a matter of individual study.

BUTLERETTE FOR THE PORCH
 Dainty and Convenient Article of Furniture That Would Grace the Home.
 Most convenient is the attractive butlerette pictured, and it will prove an accessory for the summer porch that will appeal to the hostess who likes to serve cooling home brews to the sometime guest.
 Made of mahogany and enameled in old ivory, the little butlerette has a lined drawer for spoons. It is arranged to hold the lemonade jug and glasses, and four small individual tables do away with the awkwardness of balancing one's brimming glass.

COLORS IN DECORATING HOME
 Value and Effect of Various Shades a Most Important Consideration for the Housewife.
 In decorating a house the first essential, if the undertaking is to be a success, is the knowledge of color and color values. The man of the house may insist on offering a suggestion or two as to what is to go into the den, but even then he probably won't be concerned with such a so-called feminism as color schemes, so it falls upon the woman to make or mar the project.
 Firstly, one must realize that there are physical and mental effects of color regardless of artistic value. Of course there are more or fewer vogues for certain colors and color combinations—old rose and blue or green and gold, for instance. Colors are refreshing, depressing, cheering. Although certain colors affect different persons differently there are more or less reliable effects.
 Yellow, for instance, is the color that enlarges and expands things. A room decorated in yellow makes the spaces larger and roomier. It is the magic color in that it changes not only the value of the thing that possesses that color but also the relationship of the surroundings. True, it never gives the sense of coolness, but it has the welcoming quality.
 It's the grave cases of the physician that benefit the undertakers.
