The Forerunner. Ex-Ambassador Gerard was talking about the German railroads.

"They're in an awful state," he said. "Completely out of repair; you know. On my last train-ride in Germany the jolting was so terrible that a joker said the cars had square wheels."

"The German trains go very slow now. This is supposed to save wear and tear. There's a story about a man who waited all the forenoon at a German station for a train, and then accosted the ticket agent hotly. "How about my train?" he said. "It's seventeen hours overtime. Have I got to wait here a week?"

"Don't get excited, sir," said the ticket agent. "The train'll be along right soon now." Here comes the engineer's dog."
