A RURAL WAGE CASE.

Farmer Paid Up When Summoned Before the Court.

A wage case was to have been heard in Magistrate Hunter's court Saturday, but the defendant paid up. A farmer residing in Kingston township was anxious to secure the use of the threshing machine which was about to move away from the district, and appealed to five of his neighbors' boys for help, promising them $50c an hour. When the work was completed he paid four of them in full and offered the fifth a dollar. The latter claimed that the amount due him was $1.50, and he declined to accept the dollar. Upon the farmer's refusal to pay him in full he lodged a complaint, and had his four companions to testify as to the agreement. So that instead of 50c, the amount in dispute, the farmer had to pay $2.50, which included the costs, besides spending half a day driving to the city to answer the summons.
