THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used annually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtues.

BRIAN OBJECTS TO BUSINESS TRIP FOR RUTH

CHAPTER XXX.

The journey home was entirely without incident. Ruth had been tired from her two days' work in the old mansion, and had retired to her stateroom immediately. In the morning she went directly to the ship, although Mr. Mandel told her she was at liberty to go home.

"I want to do some more work while it is all so fresh in my mind," she told him, and he objected no further. In fact, could Ruth have heard him mutter, "A find, without doubt," she might have begun to realize that he believed in her—was pleased with her, and with her work.

All day she worked steadily over her plans. When closing time came she regretfully laid them aside and went home.

Mrs. Crawford was there, and dinner was nearly ready. Ruth asked no questions, but stationed herself at the window to watch for Brian. He would be along in a minute. In some way she missed seeing him, and the turning of his key in the lock was the first intimation she had that he had arrived.

"Oh, Brian!" and she ran to him and threw her arms around his neck. "Did you miss me?" Brian asked.

"Was there any reason why I shouldn't be lonely?" he asked gruffly. The soft feel of her clinging arms had helped to evaporate his anger.

"Well, I am back now and we'll make it all up. I have so much to tell you, dear! such a wonderful old place, and I am to do anything I want to with it—almost anything."

She corrected with a little laugh, "And Newport is lovely! I never knew a place could be so heavenly!"

"Did you go alone?" Brian interrupted.

"Why—no—" amazement in her tones. "Mr. Mandel went with me."

"You mean to tell me that you went gallivanting off with a man for three days?" the veins in his face swelled to almost bursting.

"Why—Brian—of course—he had to go. He had to see to things. I couldn't do it alone. And—"

"I'd like to know what you would think of me if I took some girl and went away for three days?"

"Oh, Brian—how can you talk so? It's so different! It was on business, and you—"

"Don't talk about it! That's the reason he was willing to pay you forty dollars a week—not because you earn it—I knew you couldn't earn any such salary—but because he is in love with you. I'm not such a fool as you think me."

Ruth's eyes filled. But she was determined not to cry. The injustice of Brian's anger filled her with wrath also. She had been ready to talk of her trip, to tell him of how kind Mr. Mandel had been; now she would tell him nothing. He didn't deserve her confidence. And—she didn't trust her or else he would not say such things.

Just then the situation was relieved by the call to dinner.

Ruth dashed the tears from her eyes, and with head up and a defiant feeling in her heart led the way to the table.

She did not again speak of her trip, neither did Brian refer to it while at table. They ate in silence save when speaking of their food.

After dinner Ruth unpacked her bag, taking no pains to hide what she was doing.

"Might as well leave it out, then you'll be ready the next time he wants you to go somewhere with him," Brian sneered.

Again Ruth's eyes filled, but she made no reply, although an angry one rose to her lips. Quietly she put the bag away, then took a magazine and sat down to read.

ever divorced for being bad mannered; but I'm sure that if a census of the opinion of women were taken, and the drunkard, the spendthrift, and the wife-beater would get more leniency than the man who lets his wife struggle into her coat after the theatre performance.

As to wife beaters, I know one; talking to me about him his wife said, "I know Jim has his faults, but I never have to bludge him in public."

There are two things for you to do, Vera: either train yourself to ignore his breaches of etiquette, in time you may become just as rude as he, then his manner won't jar.

Or, you may tell him very gently how much it distresses you. If you are very tactful, he may be quite reasonable about it, and try to improve; then it will be your cue to be very consistently polite yourself, for while he is looking for missteps of his own part he won't be blind to yours.

TALKING IT OVER With Lorna Moon

The Shirtsleeves of Impoliteness.

You scored a bulls-eye, Vera. You hit me right in my weakest spot. I know that I should lecture you, saying, "If you have a husband who is good, and true, and industrious, you should be glad to forget the fact that his manners are not above criticism." But I can't for I am much prejudiced towards your viewpoint. I, too, can forgive almost anything a man, except a breach of good breeding. It is a very feminine failing that we share my girl.

I think that I could live with, and be happy with a man I loved, no matter what were his faults, just so long as he was not a boor. I know how it must agonize you to have your husband seat himself at the table before you, call out of the theatre while you are still struggling with your coat; interrupt when you speak, and belittle you in front of others; these are not cardinal sins, but they are the one that are hardest to live with.

Your husband is just ill bred, his change of attitude hasn't anything to do with a change of heart. Don't think for a minute that he has stopped loving you. I don't doubt that he loves you even more now than he did in the courting days when he minded his P and Q and took off his hat in the elevator. It is merely that good manners are not part of his nature. He hasn't been trained in consistent good manners, and he evidently hasn't been born with those inherent qualities of consideration, which make a gentleman of a beggar. Politeness is a cloak that he assumes for dress occasions and for the benefit of "company." And now that you have married him you are no longer "company"; so he throws off the cloak, and walks around in the shirt sleeves of impoliteness!

Goodness knows child what you are going to do with him! There isn't a male judge in the country that would give you a patient hearing. I don't think any man was
