

BRITISH FRONTAL ATTACK IN STORM OF BULLETS TO CAPTURE EPEHY

English County Troops Surround Town Before Advancing Against it. Corps Pushes on to Lost For a Day. With the British Army at the front, Sept. 23.—The increase in the figures showing the number of prisoners captured by the British Friday morning, from 6,000 to more than 10,000 is partly accounted by the delay in receiving information from the corps, which because of the severity of the opposition by Bavarian and Alpine troops, did not complete its part of the operations until twenty-four hours. It was not until then that it could add twenty-five hundred prisoners to those already accounted for.

They are now confronted with the task of crossing the canal and breaking through the Hindenburg system. It is going to be more difficult than smashing through the Drocourt-Queant switch line. Every day the enemy is feverishly working with all his resources to improve the defenses both in character and in depth. The main line runs west of the depth where it is underground and east of it further south where the enemy has certain obvious advantages.

The English corps referred to was opposed by superior enemy forces, including thirty-two battalions from six divisions which have already been identified among the twenty-five hundred prisoners. Numerous guns were taken which the enemy was unable to get away on account of those being so close to the front line. They had been brought there in part at least to inspire the German troops with confidence, the soldiers having a deadly fear of the British Tank Corps.

RESULTS WERE A GREAT SURPRISE

Heard So Much Talk About Tanlac, Took It Himself And Troubles End

"Well, there is no doubt in my mind now about Tanlac being a fine medicine, for I have tried it," said Mrs. Fred Boulter, who resides at 1024 Dufferin Street, Toronto, recently. Mrs. Boulter has lived in Toronto for nearly twenty years and has many friends. She is engaged in the florist and feed business on Dufferin street. "My friends tell me I am looking fine now," she continued, "but before I took Tanlac I certainly was feeling terrible. I had been suffering with my stomach for two years and in spite of all my efforts to find relief I kept getting worse. My appetite was so poor that I never relished anything and what little I did eat made me feel miserable for hours. My stomach was sour and upset all the time and I would fill up with gas which would press on my heart and make it hard for me to breathe. No matter what I ate I suffered from indigestion and would have such awful pains in the pit of my stomach at times that I could hardly stand it. I felt tired and worn out all the time, and suffered constantly with fearful headache. I couldn't rest well at night and would get up in the mornings feeling as badly as if I hadn't slept at all. "I heard so many people in the store talking about the good results made up my mind to try it and my improvement has really been surprising. I have just started on my fourth bottle and I never feel a sign of indigestion at all. My appetite is splendid and I feel stronger and have more energy than I have in a long time. I got one of my friends to take it some time ago and she is simply delighted over the results. I gladly recommend it to every one because I know from experience how fine it is. Tanlac is sold in Kingston by A. P. Chown, in Plevna by Gilbert Oatler, in Battersea by C. S. Clark, in Fernleigh by Martin, in Ardach by M. J. Scullion, in Sharbot Lake by W. Y. Cannon.—Advt.

"Eyes of Youth." The famous New York success, "Eyes of Youth," which has just completed a year's run at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, New York city, will be presented at the Grand Opera House on Wednesday, and Thursday, Sept. 25th and 26th with a matinee on Thursday afternoon, under the joint direction of A. H. Woods and the Messrs. Sherrin. This notable dramatic novelty needs little introduction to playgoers. Few plays in recent years have so captured the popular fancy, or have received such glowing tributes from the press. The New York Evening Sun called it "A delightful and beautiful theatrical gem." "An unusual play, brimful of human interest," said the New York Herald. The authors are Max Merz and Charles Guernon. The play is in three acts and four episodes, the latter being visualizations of the revelations of a girl's future. The story deals with a young woman's choice of a career in life. The result is a play remarkable not only in plot and production, but in its tremendous spiritual significance.

"Garden of Allah." In these days "second," "third" and even "fourth" companies, the Lieber Company's "The Garden of Allah," now on its sixth annual tour, and which opens at the Grand Opera House on Friday, Sept. 27th, for two nights and a matinee on Saturday, is a welcome relief from such it is the only organization even sent out on the road. It takes highest rank as a scenic production, forming a background for the large company of players, camels, horses, donkeys, goats, etc., for all of which it requires a special train of seven cars to transport from city to city. The garden of Count Antoin, in the second act, is one of the most beautiful scenes in the play. In the third act occurs the famous sandstorm of the desert and, although being a bleak, bare desert scene, it is surpassing in its beauty and magical scenic effects. "The out-Tunis, furnishes the scenes for the last act, where even doves can be heard cooing in the balcony.

Laugh When People Step On Your Feet Try this yourself then pass it along to others. It works!

Such ! ! ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called frezone when applied to a tender, aching corn stops its growth at once, and soon the corn dries up and lifts right out without pain. He says frezone is an ether compound which dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding tissue or skin. A quarter of an ounce of frezone will cost very little at any drug store, but is sufficient to remove every hard "corn" soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels.

DENIES BEING MEDDLER

SIR SAM HUGHES DID NOT BULLDOZE GOVERNMENT

He Says He Kept to Own Department While Other Ministers Constantly "Butted" Into His. Ottawa, Sept. 21.—Political events of the period between the outbreak of the war and his own resignation of the office of Minister of Militia and Defence are recalled by an interview which Sir Sam gave to-day. To Sir Sam it has been reported that a fortnight or so ago while Toronto Exhibition was in progress, "one of the most prominent members of the Federal Cabinet" made the statement that "Hughes, while in the Cabinet had rendered himself offensive to his colleagues by seeking to become master of the Administration and to control, not only the Militia, but all other departments." Hence the ex-Minister of Militia made the statement in which he denies the allegation and seeks to carry the war into Africa by asserting that instead of being himself a meddler he was the victim of the interference of other Ministers in the transaction of the business of the Militia Department. In this connection he again brought his guns to bear upon Sir Thomas White, the Minister of Finance. Gen. Hughes also took the opportunity of denying that he had been guilty of "bulldozing the Government" to prevent a general election in 1914. The allegation that he had sought to control departments other than his own, Sir Sam said was "devoid of one particle of truth." He had recognized it to be the right and duty of each and every Minister, he said, to discuss fully in the Cabinet important matters of policy detail. "My policy, and I claim it is the constitutional one," said Sir Sam, "was and is, that the full Cabinet should be consulted on all matters of policy and on all important questions, but on minor matters, each Minister should consult the Prime Minister alone and not bother the Cabinet. While I never either directly or indirectly interfered in another department, some of the Ministers of other departments, day in and day out, 'butted' into mine, even in matters of petty detail."

Favored an Election. Gen. Hughes said he had been assured that he was charged with "bulldozing the whole Cabinet" to prevent an election in 1914. When war broke out, he stated, the question of summoning Parliament or holding an election was discussed. "I favored an election at once, that is before a session," he continued, "but I found no fault because the majority report of my colleagues decided on a session."

In the short war session which followed, Sir Sam said, the Liberal party as such, had played the game splendidly, and the Prime Minister had pledged himself to the Government that party politics should not be introduced or recognized during the war. Sir Sam stated that upon his return to Ottawa after the despatch of the first Canadian contingent to England, he had informed the Prime Minister that he was going to England for a rest and to see the boys properly established.

To my surprise he informed me that it had been unanimously decided by the Cabinet, in my absence, to have a general election, and that my own opinion was asked," continued the ex-Minister, "and so I found myself asked, 'How can you, in the face of your pledges to Parliament and the people of Canada?'"

Played Game Loyal. The following day Sir Sam said he handed the Premier a memorandum, reviewing the situation and concluding with the simple expression "to the people of Canada, Parliament and the people of Canada that party politics should not be introduced, and in view of my own promise that partisanship should find no place in the land during the war, I could not see how any man of honor could consent to force a general election."

"There was no threat," said Sir Sam. "There was no bulldozing, I never spoke to a human soul on the subject until my return from England. Yet I now learn that for four years this has been trumped up against me as having wrecked the Tory party by bulldozing the Government in October, 1914, and preventing a general election."

Two Plays Coming. Frank P. Prescott, advance representative of "The Marriage Question," is in the city making arrangements for its production at the Grand Opera House on Monday, September 30th. Roy Simpson, business manager of the "Misses Dollar Doll," a highly musical comedy, is also arranging for its presentation on Thursday, October 3rd.
