The Best Cough Syrup Is Home-made
Here's an easy way to save 75, and yet have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? When you do, you will understand why thousands of families, the world over, feel that they could hardly keep house without it. It's simple and cheap, but the way it takes hold of a cough will quickly turn it into a permanent place in your home. Into a 12-oz. bottle, pour 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth); then add plain granulated sugar syrup to fill up the bottle. Or, if desired, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, never spoils, and gives you 18 ounces of better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for five times its cost.

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy conquers a cough—usually in 24 hours or less. It seems to penetrate through every air passage, loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, heals the membranes, and gives almost immediate relief. Spoons, did for throat ticks, hoarseness, croup, bronchitis and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations for throat and chest ailments.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "18 ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

"The Wife" By Jane Phelps

BRIAN BECOMES ANGRY AND IS ANXIOUS TO GO HOME

CHAPTER LXVI

When Brian left his sentence unfinished, because just at that moment Claude Beckly joined them; he escaped a scathing rebuke which trembled on Ruth's lips.

"Well, here I am. Yes, I'll take a smoke, thank you," Beckly said as Brian pushed the box lying on the table toward him. Then facetiously: "Did you give him a good talking to, Mrs. Hackett? He deserved it."

"No, indeed!" Ruth braced herself for the ordeal. "Brian and I never give each other what you call a talking to, do we, Brian?"

"Not so you could notice it," he replied with a twisted sort of a smile.

"He always was a lucky dog. Before he married he always carried off all the pretty girls and left the rest of us moping. Now he's got a wife who lets him go right on having a good time and doesn't nag him. For goodness sake tell me: 'Are there any more at home like you?'"

Ruth laughed, she couldn't help it. Claude Beckly was the most ridiculous creature she ever had met.

"I am the one and only," she returned.

"Then what am I to do?" his black serious tone made her laugh again. "She was a bit hysterical, did not escape Brian. He was sulking now."

"Come, Ruth, let's go home!" he said after a moment. "We've spent all our money, there's no use staying here."

"Oh, don't be a grouch! sit and smoke a while," Beckly said, helping himself to another cigarette.

"Yes, do!" Ruth added. "The music is delightful," she really dreaded being alone with Brian; then, too, deep in her heart she thought perhaps she might learn more of Brian and Mollie King from Beckly—although she would have hesitated to acknowledge it.

"Oh, very well," Brian sank back in his chair.

"Can you keep him away?" Beckly asked Ruth.

"From what?"

"From Mollie. She looked with favor on me a while back. Now she scorns me. A jug of red ink, and an Italian table de hôte and me no longer tempt her. Brian has spoiled her for the simple life. It is a shame that one man should have so much, and the rest of us nothing. Don't you think so?"

"I think you are talking like an ass!" Brian interrupted. "Ruth isn't used to your nonsense, Beckly. Cut it out!"

"You don't think me silly, do you, fair lady?" Beckly asked, paying no slightest attention to Brian's angry looks.

"You couldn't expect me to say 'yes' to that question, could you?" Ruth parried, she was beginning to enjoy herself.

"It's all you could answer!" Brian spoke again.

"Oh, come, Hackett! I'm not as black as he is painting me, Mrs. Hackett," he turned to Ruth. "I'm sore because, that's all. I've always had a reason enough to be so, and since I met you the reason has grown immeasurably."

"I am afraid you are a flatterer."

"Nothing like that! I always tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

"Of course, you do!" this time Brian sneered.

"To change the subject," Beckly was imperturbable. "Will you and Mrs. Hackett take dinner with me tomorrow night? Not at some million dollar joint, but down in the village. Bare tables and paper napkins, Mrs. Hackett, but absolutely clean; and also with the dinner there will be given free, a feast of reason and a flow of soul, impossible to find in a place like this, with an indescribable gesture, he dismissed the roof-garden as though it were unworthy his presence.

"Shall we, Brian?" Ruth looked at her husband for acceptance of the invitation. "You haven't any engagement, have you?"

"No," Brian was surprised that Ruth wanted to go. Could it be possible she was attracted by Claude Beckly in spite of what she had said, and that she wanted to be with him? His jealous nature was inflamed by the thought. Ruth was so chic, so smart-looking, he wondered a boob like Beckly would want to make love to her. Well, he needn't try that on, it wouldn't work.

"Then we'll accept with pleasure," Ruth said. She would take this opportunity of seeing the kind of places married men. "What time shall you want us?"

About seven. "I'll go early and save a table. Brian knows the way."

A few moments afterward they had taken their seats at the table. (Fortunately, Ruth thought), was so crowded they could not sit together. Had a woman ever spent such an evening? She wondered as she sank down into the seat beside an old man: To-morrow—Claude Beckly Arranges a Surprise For Ruth and Brian.

TALKING IT OVER With Lorna Moon

War Hands

"I like or dislike people because of their hands" said the Whimsical Little Lady who is still so young that she has very emphatic ideas on most things.

I didn't follow the conversation any further so I don't know if it was the shape of the hands or what they accomplished that decided the Little Lady's affections. But hands are a pretty good indication of whether one is worthy of regard or not, these days.

Hands that twinkle busily amid olive drab wool; hands that are grimed with oil, factory hands; hands that grasp a hoe; hands that scrub; hands roughened with antiseptic; hands that smooth pillows; noble hands making dressings; generous hands that smooth pillows; nimble hands that give and give; working hands; Hands that turn
