A Stubborn Cough Loosens Right Up

This home-made remedy is a wonder for quick results. Easily and cheaply made.

Here is a home-made syrup which millions of people have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It is cheap and simple, but very prompt in action. Under its healing, soothing influence, chest soreness, phlegm loosens, breathing becomes easier, tickling in throat stops and you get a good night's restful sleep. The nasal, throat and chest cavities are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, whooping cough, bronchial asthma or winter coughs.

To make this splendid cough syrup, pour 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup and shake thoroughly. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you get 16 ounces—a family supply—of much better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. Keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated extract of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its prompt healing effect upon the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex, with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Books And Their Authors

FIGHTING FRANCE.
By Stephane Lauzanne. 231 pages. Price $1.50. McClelland, Goodchild & Stewart, Toronto, publishers.

Stephane Lauzanne, at the age of twenty-seven, became editor-in-chief of the Paris Matin, as the result of exceptional achievement in journalism. Merit and ability gave him this position of unique power, for the Matin has a circulation in France of nearly two million copies a day, and the editor-in-chief thereby exerts a power it would be difficult to overestimate. On the outbreak of the war he was called to the colors, and fought as a lieutenant at the Marne and at Verdun. In 1916 he was recalled to serve in the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Switzerland. In October of the same year he came to the United States as head of the official bureau of French information. In this position he has rendered valuable services to his country, and the great climax has been reached in his book, "Fighting France."

There have been many war books—very deluge of literature in which thinking men have been submerged—but most books of wartime reminiscences do not ring true. There is too obvious an attempt to be dramatic and sensational. This book avoids this error, and its author has contented himself with telling in a simple and convincing manner something of the part he was called upon to play. It is divided into four chapters. The first tells why France is fighting. It tells of the declaration of war and the French mobilization, of the invasion of France, the promulgated cruelties of the Germans, and of the German organized spy system. The author sums up the reasons why France is fighting in the following words:

"We may say that France is fighting for two reasons. The first reason is that on the third of August, 1914 war was declared on her; she was forced to fight; her territory was invaded, her cities burned to the ground, her fields ravaged, her citizens massacred. The second reason is because she does not want to have to fight the future of the world in this horror to be reproduced a second time; she wishes, in the immortal words of Washington, 'that plague of mankind, war, banished off the earth.'"

The second chapter tells how France is fighting, how her men, women and children vie with each other in heroic effort. Lauzanne illustrates this chapter with incidents from his own personal experiences at the front, and tells of some thrilling episodes of the Marne and Verdun. The armies of the rear and the work at home are shown in all the splendor of their self-sacrifice, and the whole chapter is summed up in one soul-stirring passage:

"Future historians will state that France has fought, not only with all her courage, her tenacity, and her soul, but with all her men, women and children, who, in spite of the terrible times, their sufferings, and their mourning, have remained firmly united, forming a firm rock from which not a single stone has been splintered."

The third chapter utterly refutes the German statement that France is bleeding white. The noble little republic has suffered tremendously, but it is still secure. The author shows the exact condition of his country in men, money and munitions, and gives a summary of all the great resources still at her command, in spite of what has already been accomplished. Financially, France is more secure than at the beginning of the war. Lauzanne's own words are:

"Yes, France is suffering. But it is not bleeding white. It is not true that she is worn out. The horrible hope Germany had formed of emptying France of her strength, of leaving her, fighting for breath, and conquered, beaten to the earth for centuries to come, has not been realized. France always stands upright, her arm is still strong, her muscles vigorous and her blood rich."

And full proof is given of that statement.

The final chapter gives a clear enunciation of France's war aims. They are stated in three words: Restoration, Reparation, and Guarantees. The Alsace-Lorraine situation is treated in detail, and the question of a league of nations discussed from every angle. The book cannot but strengthen the ties that bind the Allies together. It is one of the most striking documents of the war, and its very title stands for the France that has fought, is fighting, and ever will fight to the end.

All who read this book will find their love and admiration for France increased, and it will do much to strengthen the profound regard in which all the Allied nations hold the country that has suffered much, but is still unconquered, and is now on the high road to victory.

New Books Worth While.

The latest shipment of books received at the College Book Store contains reading matter of great interest to all classes and all literary tastes. Many already famous novelists have added to their laurels in their latest productions, and there are some books by new writers which show signs of great promise. Two books by well known writers are especially good. One is "The Laughing Girl," one of the few books by Robert Chambers that have not been published in serial form. It is a delightful mystery story, full of action and thrill, and with fine clean romance. The scene is laid in Switzerland, where the American hero goes to claim an estate. The other is "Shavings," a new novel by Joseph C. Lincoln, a story of the quaint Cape Codders; a story with a good plot, a pretty love story, and a bushel of hearty laughs which make this book very delightful.

"Gambler," by Elizabeth Robins, a popular author of "The Little Sister," appeared as a serial in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and won golden opinions. It is the story of the perplexities of a beautiful divorcee, with the same impossible-to-guess-the-outcome fascination which characterizes the previous works of this writer. "The Years of Rachel," by Berta Ruck, is a humorous story of a modern Rachel who was engaged for nearly ten years. "The Island Mystery," by George Birmingham, is a war story of an unusual type. It is a sky-daring comedy of the Kaiser's intrigue for gasoline in a cave-honeycombed island. "That Which Hath Wings," by Richard Dehan, is a brilliant novel of the hectic, pleasure-seeking, loose-thinking and loose-living smart set of London and Paris just prior to Armageddon, and of the wholesome and brave awakening when the world conflagration brought the into their senses. "Treat 'em Rough," by Ring Lardner, matches "Dere Mable," for favor of the training camps. It is made up

The Man on Watch

In Ottawa a coal dealer is advertising his supply and begging people to buy. Ottawans must be strange lot to require coal-coaxing.

Out at Harrowsmith when bridal couples return after being wed elsewhere, they are met with a rice storm and a band. Harrowsmith is a merry place, probably owing to being in the same sector as Verona, where they like to break up wedding ceremonies.

Queen's University medical laboratories are now known to the whole country after discovering the anti-influenza serum. Here we have scientific medical research right at our doors.

Now that the authorities have been able to soak a poor woman for having an extra allowance of flour in her household, let us get after the big fellows who put away potatoes to sell at exorbitant prices and those who store eggs and butter until they are unfit for use.

Please do not criticize the Government for having stred 1,500 tons of hard coal for local buildings. Bless rather than curse it. The coal is here and can be used otherwise if needed.

The late Senator Richardson used to say that he wanted to die with his "boots on." Figuratively speaking, he got his wish, for he passed away in harness, active and vigorous to the last and mourned by the whole city.

Well, we're all going to get out to church to-morrow and vow never to miss a Sunday until the fuel commissioner has his say.

A man who would accuse a doctor of giving him an order for liquor without examining him, and the Hun who broke the wrists of the British nurse who was tending him, are two of a kind, in the Lammman's opinion.

Those certainly were very thoughtful gentlemen who retained a foot strip of land on Toronto street so as to keep lot owners from getting access to the street. A nice holdup that was. But repentance came.

If Kingston had not been a military post for the past 245 years (it was founded in 1673) it might make more of soldiers. This town is too conservative and too old to change its attitude of being undemonstrative, so the modern soldiers will have to excuse it. If five hundred sons of Kingston were to return from France all of a sudden, this old town might probably give them a few cheers—if it practised a little in advance.

Notes of Interest to Booklovers.

In connection with Gene Stratton Porter's contribution to the recruiting of America's land army, "A Daughter of the Land,"—the story of a girl who had a passion to make the earth produce—it is interesting to note that Mrs. Porter has a reading public of extraordinary extent and size. Her publishers have been counting up the number of copies printed and sold of her books, including "Freckles" and a "Girl of the Lumberlot," and they find that the total is over six million. The sale in England has been very large. Although "Freckles" is fourteen years old, John Murray, one of the oldest publishers in England, sold during the last year, 39,687 copies. The total sales of her books in England last year were 495,376. Large editions have been sold also in Australia, Canada, and in various translations all over the world.

"In Flanders Fields," one of the most widely famous poems of the world war, gives the title to a volume of poems by its author, Lieut.-Col. John McCrae, who died at the front last spring. Col. McCrae was not only a soldier and a poet; he had also been a physician in Canada before the war.

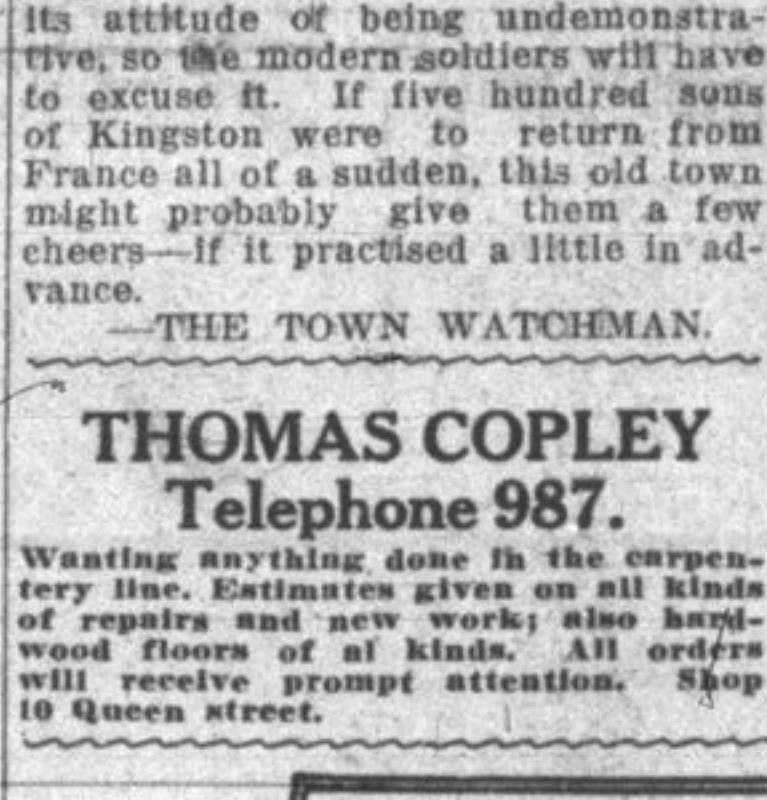

Though there may be a few more fields for Lieut.-Col. W. A. Bishop, "face of axes," to conquer, there are practically no more honors left for him to win. He has the V.C., D.S.O., M.C., D.F.C., and some others, and the London Advertiser is now suggesting that it is about time for him to invade the academic lists of distinctions and add an LL.D. or so to his collection.

"The Flame that is France," by Henri Malherbe, which won the Goncourt prize in Paris as the best book published in France during 1917, has been brought out in an English translation. It is an interpretation of the spirit of war time France, weary but resolute, written from the trenches by a lieutenant in the French army.

The American soldier, at the front and behind the lines, is the chief subject of Bruce Bairnsfather's droll cartoons in the fourth and latest volume of his "Fragments from France," and he treats the Yanks in the same comic spirit which made famous the exploits of the British soldiers. The cartoons also give glimpses of the Italian front and of warfare at high elevations.

The sale of "Dere Mable," love letters of a rocke, has now reached a total of over 250,000 copies, and the demand is still as great as ever. The printers are being kept busy turning out new editions.

now use what are known as combination or double-acting baking powders. This style of baking powder has two actions. It acts first when cold water or milk is added in the mixing bowl. Its second action requires the heat of the oven. This strong, double leavening power is what is needed for the heavy war flours and wheat flour substitutes.

EGG-O Baking Powder

is a pure, strong, double-acting baking powder that Canadian housewives are finding just right for war-time baking. It bakes light, easily-digested, deliciously flavored bread, cakes and tea biscuits.

If you are having trouble with your baking, try Egg-O instead of the ordinary baking powders. You'll be delighted with the results.

Your Safest Guide to Value

IN buying shoes, unless you yourself are an expert, you must take somebody's word for value in them. Price alone is not a safe guide, for prices today are determined by such a broad sweep of abnormal conditions. The "looks" of the shoe will not assure you of value, for its wearing qualities are mostly invisible.

You will seldom be led astray if you will go to a reliable dealer and benefit by his advice based on knowledge and experience. If in addition you will see that the manufacturer's trade-mark is on the shoes you buy, you will have double assurance of service and satisfaction.

The manufacturer's trade-mark is a direct guarantee to you of shoe quality at fair prices, and it is the strongest possible endorsement of your dealer's judgment of values. It is your safest guide to service and economy.

A.H.M. War-Time Selections offer special Service Value for Men, Women and Children. Ask your dealer for them.
