Canada's Army.

Recruiting figures compiled in Ottawa show that since the beginning of the war there have been 53,153 volunteers for overseas service in the Dominion, and that the Toronto Military District leads with 126,772, which is slightly better than giving one-fifth of the whole Dominion. The two other Ontario districts have also made very creditable showings. No. 1, Kingston, giving 45,235, and the London district giving 43,277. This shows that the Province of Ontario has given close to half the volunteers to date. Second honors fall to District No. 10, which in the early part of the war represented the Province of Manitoba, but which has since been enlarged to take in part of Saskatchewan. The district gave 73,025. Since May 31, however, the local district has fallen away in the leadership, the Montreal district doing better, with 11,733 volunteers compared with 6,351 for the Toronto district.
