"THE WIFE"

By Jane Phelps.

IN HELPING ANOTHER, RUTH HERSELF IS HELPED

CHAPTER CXXXIV.

Angry tears came into Ruth's eyes as she read. The idea that even in his sickness Brian should long for Mollie King, hurt her dreadfully. He might have said he longed for her. Of course she wasn't a "good girl" like Mollie King, she said aloud, as she wiped her eyes, and she didn't wear a becoming nurse's uniform.

To think he would fret more because he could not have Mollie with him, than he did because he was hurt.

"I am glad he had a plain nurse. I hope she was down-right ugly!" Ruth said as the tears again started when she re-read the part of his letter telling of his "longing" for Mollie. What if they did talk of her and little Brian—they were together, while she was so far away and alone.

Someway Ruth could not overcome the bitterness this letter engendered. She thought of it almost constantly for days. It was inconceivable that if Brian really loved her, he would not long for Mollie as he said he did. Again all the softness she had felt vanished, and she was tormented by the old jealousy and the old distrust.

She wondered how long Brian would be convalescing, and if he and Mollie would spend that period taking long walks together, and if she care that they talked of her and the baby? It was their being together that their intimacy would become even greater, perhaps.

Women were like that; they were so sympathetic when a man they cared for was sick or injured. Ruth never doubted that Mollie was in love with Brian, whatever his feelings toward her were. At times she now did—Ruth believed that Brian also was in love with Mollie, although she never could explain why he had not married her—explain it to her own satisfaction. Of course Mollie would have been glad to marry Brian.

Ruth threw herself into her work with such energy after the receipt of this letter, that Mabel wondered what had caused her to act as if she wanted to work harder than even the exigencies of the business demanded. He tried to caution her, told her she would make herself ill, and finally he became so worried by her feverish actions that he sent her to Philadelphia for a day or two upon some business another might have attended to as well. He thought

Green Gardens

"I have a garden of flowers, fragrant and fresh, and fair; And the blast of every hour Can never no have there. 'Tis the garden where Memory's fancy plays And the flowers are dear Faces of Olden Days."

Have you a green garden—a sort of individual winter garden of the heart, where you may wander at will in the blakest weather and always find the warmth of sunshine, a garden where you may go to find refreshment in the dustiest dry day?

If you are over fifty you have a garden of some sort, of course. But what is growing in it? Is it bright with flower faces that love you, is it fragrant with the sweet breath of

Give Candy Cascarets to a Bilious, Constipated Child

"Mother gives me a candy Cascaret when I am cross, sick and won't play."

TO MOTHERS! Each ten cent box of Cascarets, candy cathartic, contains full directions for dose for children aged one year old and upwards. Nothing else "works" the nasty bile, sour fermentations and constipation poison from the tender little bowels so gently, yet so thoroughly. Even cross, feverish, bilious children gladly take Cascarets without being coaxed. Cascarets taste just like candy. Cascarets never gripe the little bowels, never sicken, never injure, but above all, they never disappoint the worried mother.
