AWAY BACK HOME.

By Crawford C. Slack.
As we drift and roam to away back home, somehow our memory eludes,
To the old friends true which our childhood knew, to the plain and the simple things,
How our thoughts turn back to the beaten track, to the things in the old home town,
To the songs we sung when we were young, to the jokes of some village clown,
Though scattered wide from that countryside, the friends we once knew there,
An interest deep in them we keep as to how they are and where,
Away back there immune from care at the youthful countryside,
At the parent cot, Oh hallowed spot, where the door stood open wide,
To the bye-bye chair and the love things there in the plain old fashioned room,
The spinning wheel, the swifts and the reel, the bunk and the homemade loom,
The wood-stove there and the bark-bottomed chair, things of our early delight,
The tick-a-lack-tock of the Seth Thomas clock, which seemed to tick louder at night,
There's the old trundle bed with its patch-work spread, how dear to our heart still it seems
Where you and where I in the years gone by revealed in youthful dreams,
Oh the creek and the mill and the coasting hill and the shady picnic ground,
Where with Mary and Lill and Honty and Bill, with baskets we all sat around,
Oh the love-light ways of the early days is a balm to the world-worn soul,
How they serve to cheer in the after year as a recompense for the whole,
In the race for gold our hearts may grow cold, and success may our labors crown,
But the brightest part of life was the start way back in the old home town.
