"There is a Tiger Within Me!"

This is what Barbara Forbes discovered when she had her first pangs of jealousy over the intimacy between her husband and Blanche Orton. And she feared this tiger—feared that it might wreck her marriage, if she could not become master of it.

For, Barbara knew she had no proof of grounds for her jealousy. She knew that her wild, ungovernable suspicion were entirely unreasonable. And suspicion of the innocent always ends in disaster.

But, on the other hand, what a pity it was that Neil—her husband—did not try to help her conquer the wild thing within her—help her by being over-particular to give her no cause to suspect him. Neil was so careless about appearances; often, he did not even take the trouble to rectify a misrepresentation.

Yet, Neil loved Barbara deeply. It hurt him to see her unhappy. And, this being the case, it looks as though things were going to end happily, doesn't it?

But proof is surer than supposition, so to find out conclusively, read "The Promoter's Wife," which starts in the Whig on Feb. 7th.

BRIAN GIVES HIS CONSENT TO RUTH DOING HOME WORK

CHAPTER CLIII.
How glad Ruth was that she had told Arthur Mandel what she had concerning Brian, his feeling about her work, etc. She knew more than glad she was that Brian had begun to appreciate what Mandel had done for her, both before he went away and while he was overseas. She almost held her breath as she waited to see what Brian would say.

"What do you think, Ruth? Do you care to help Mandel until he finds someone?"
The question so startled and surprised Ruth that for some moments she could not bring herself to answer, not until Brian had added:

"Did you think me so selfish, dear, that I would not know how to give you the work—I also appreciate your kindness to us when I was away," he said, turning to Mandel. "Decide as you please, Ruth."

"I shall be delighted Mr. Mandel!" Ruth's eyes shone with delight. She had dreamed more than either of the men facing her, the giving up of her loved tasks, the excitement grown almost necessary to her. Then too it would be some time before Brian would get really started. While she had saved a good deal, and he a little, she knew only too well that what they had would not last long, did not pay practice soon come to the soldier-lawyer. "I can easily give two or three hours each morning to you without in the least interfering with my home duties. Rachel is very competent," she had added that last because she wanted Mandel to know she would still keep a servant if she did not receive the large salary he had paid her—that Brian could afford to let her do that.

"I can't tell you how grateful I am," Mandel replied as he rose to go and rather sheepishly drew some plans from his pocket. You see, I took your kindness for granted and brought the plan of the Murry house in Boston along. It is to be entirely re-decorated." He then explained the different exposures of the rooms, the lay-out of the grounds, etc. "I have taken the liberty of speaking of you to several of my friends," he said to Brian, who accompanied him to the door. "I told them you had changed the location of your office and were now ready for business. I love it and look quite strong yet; I should advise that you go slowly for a time."

When Brian returned to the sitting room he found Ruth quietly waiting for him, no sign of the plans Mandel had left with her to be seen.
"I suppose you are anxious to get to work," he remarked.

"No, I shall only work when I am alone. I left the shop to make a home for you. And, Brian, I am so happy you do not object to my doing a little in my old line. I love it and besides that it will help a lot until you get going. But dear, I never shall have the work around when you are at home. We have been separated so much that now nothing must make our companionship less close."

"It means to try to be reasonable," Brian had returned to the objections to women in business are ingrained in me. I hate to see a woman outside of her home unless it is imperatively necessary that she be the bread winner. But I am not such an old grinch as to deprive you of doing things at home that will give you luxuries that for some time I may not be able to earn, or that will make you happier—because you can keep Rachel."

"That's not all, Brian, truly it isn't! I do hate housework, and I love Rachel, and like to have her with me. But my work is a perfect joy to me! It isn't work—not as I shall do it now; it is playing with something that interests and entertains me immensely. You have made me very happy."

"Thank God for that! I guess I have made you pretty miserable at times. Be a working lady as long as you want to, if you work inside your home instead of in public places. Now we won't talk of it any more. It is settled and we are both happy. Get on your duds and we'll go down to the stationers and order what I need for the office."

"Oh, I forgot you would need all sorts of papers and things!"

"Don't look so chagrined, you did so well that you have left me almost nothing to attend to. Come on, I'll introduce you to all sorts of legal papers, briefs, etc. Then next time you furnish a lawyer's office you will be up on stationery requirements."

"There'll be no 'next time.' How dare you suggest it?" so, laughing and chatting happily, they went out to shop, the perfect understanding which existed between them making for such happiness as neither had known for years.

Dandelions in Bloom
Toronto Globe—Toronto may not be in the sub-tropical zone but there were dandelions in bloom yesterday in front of the Medical Building of the University of Toronto. Prof. Thomson, whose interest as a biologist has been aroused, says the University heating plant tunnel which is in the vicinity, doubtless, helped the dandelions to defy the laws of nature, but in any case January outdoor bloom in Toronto is unique.

Frock May Be Made of White Chiffon or Other Material.

Garment is Trimmed Very Simply With Rows of Inch-Wide Glossy Ribbon in Color.

The little dance dress shown in the sketch may be made of white chiffon, net georgette or silk tissue, and it is trimmed very simply with rows of inch-wide glossy ribbon in color. Rainbow colors may be selected for the ribbon, two or three of these dainty pale shades being used with very good effect. If desired, the fabric of the gown may also be in color, and the frock be a genuine rainbow affair.

A foundation of sheer silk should be used for the dress, and it may be made a slipover by running an elastic in at the waistline. Two or three ribbon straps hold it in place over the shoulder, and a ribbon girdle with long ends circles the waist.

A dress of this kind is easy to make and may be very inexpensive. Spending a great deal of money on a dance or evening dress is never really necessary and at present it is poor taste. There will be few formal evening functions during the coming winter season, and the simple dances scheduled call for simple costuming.

All afternoon lace dress is always pretty, and many lace dresses are being featured for the coming season. Extreme simplicity is the rule in designing these frocks. Frequently the bodice is merely a wide girle of silk or satin topped by a frill or yoke of lace and with short lace sleeves. The skirt may be a single length of lace, or it may be formed of two or three lace flounces. A ribbon sash or girle finishes the dress.

Ribbon trimming is extremely popular this season. Plain bands of ribbon are used on frocks for both daytime and evening wear, and ribbon flowers, bowknots, etc., appear on innumerable evening dresses of sheer materials.

Very narrow "baby" ribbon is often knitted to form cuffs and collar for a street suit or frock, and the knitted ribbon sweater has been worn for months. During the summer it was merely a sweater, now it appears as a sleeveless vest to be worn underneath the suit jacket.

APRON DRAPERIES ARE SMART

Tablier is Really Only a Panel—Arrangement to Be Much in Evidence This Winter.

Apron draperies appear on so many things that they may be considered a distinct fashion. They may be short or long and they may or may not have the slightest connection with the dress proper. It is as if one had really added an apron of brocade or marquisette or satin to the dress one is wearing.

Sometimes they begin at the neck and hang straight down well below the hips and are caught in only with the narrowest of string belts. Again a hem is folded back on the bottom of the drapery, as in a peasant's apron and bright-hued embroidery is added in cross-stitch.

In effect the tablier is really only a panel such as appeared on summer frocks. As this arrangement is so much in evidence this winter it is well to note that any sort of fabric can be used to develop it. With velvet the gold and silver brocades, with a banding of fur, are very smart. As no fullness is seen on the bodices this season, most of them being of the basquette plainness of the Civil war, the apron tunic may begin at the collar as a waistcoat, spreading out at the waistline, from which it falls free. Now and then the tunic buttons in the back or again it is set in quite apart from any relations to either back or front.

TALKING IT OVER With Lorna Moon

Good at the Uptake.

"She's good at the uptake," as they say in Scotland—meaning that she is responsive, always ready with the hand of friendship extended, always ready to help in any way she can.

That wonderful quality explains much of her popularity and her great success her four fine boys. Children—especially boys are very sensitive to the "cold shoulder."

I remember one afternoon on which she had gone to get some trouble to prepare a steak and kidney pudding for dinner, a dish very much liked by the boys, and Dad. "I'll have to spend the whole afternoon watching it," she explained. "I like to steam five hours—so we can sew together and visit."

About five-thirty the telephone rang, her husband was on the line and was phoning to say that the boys and he thought it would be a good idea to have dinner down town and then go to a show, and would she meet them. She agreed that it was a wonderful idea, and she would meet them at six-thirty. Not a word was said about the dinner she had gotten ready or the fact that they might have phoned early.

"I'll keep," she said as she turned off the gas—besides they planned

Beautiful things are everyday things now

Look around you. See the large number of dainty silk blouses in beautiful tints that are being worn. And the quantities of dainty underwear the stores are showing—sweeter, most beautiful things you have ever seen. It was not so a few years ago. What has caused the difference?

Certainly and surely—one big factor has been Lux. Women would not buy these things right along unless there was a gentle, sure way of washing them—without discoloring, warping or fading.

There is—it's the Lux way. Won't turn silks yellow—won't hurt chiffons—won't shrink woollens. Lux won't hurt anything that pure water itself may touch.
