CHAPTER XXIX.—Continued.

Turkey was handsomely represented at the Stadtvogel during a couple of years; the Turk prisoners were one Raschid and the other Tager.

Raschid was a young man, about thirty-five years of age. He was lodged in a cell on the floor above ours and there kept in solitary confinement. He was arrested while passing through Germany, because he, too, openly manifested his sympathies for France. Like Tager, his compatriot, he had received a French education, and had lived in Paris for several years. This poor fellow, who was locked up all day long, was not allowed to read or smoke, but several among us when apprised of his hard lot succeeded from time to time in providing him with some French books, cigarettes, and also with a little food. Profoundly moved by the misfortunes of Raschid, he was allowed to play the instrument in his cell, which during the latter part of his captivity was situated on the side of the triangle facing the cell in which Raschid was confined. And there he would draw from his violin marvellous strains that would send a ray of comfort to the poor Turk's soul.

One night I was called to Raschid's cell. He was very ill. And while we talked together I obtained a great deal of information from him. The conversation, being in French, was not understood by the attendant non-commissioned officer.

Raschid believed at that time that he had been entirely forgotten by the military authorities. He was confined there over five months before hearing one single reason why he was so barbarously treated. Then upwards of five months after his arrest, he was taken to the office of Gen. Von Kessel, high commanding officer at the Steins of Brandenburg, Raschid, with whom I talked on the day following this interview, related the incidents of his conversation with the great general. Von Kessel informed him that he would soon be liberated; that he would travel by express train through the Balkans on his way to Constantinople. The general asked him the following questions amongst others:

"How long have you been in jail?"

"One hundred and sixty-two days."

"How long have you been in solitary confinement?"

"One hundred and sixty-two days."

"Here the general burst out laughing. "One hundred and sixty-two days!" he exclaimed "how is that?"

"This is strange!" repeated the high Prussian commander.

Without asking further information, the general sent Raschid back to his cell. A few days later Raschid left his cell and returned to his quarters. Tager was a man about fifty years of age who came to Berlin provided with a passport from the German Minister in Switzerland. He was to return to Paris, where he resided, but one day he was arrested and brought to Stadtvogel. He was never told during his captivity—which lasted four months—why he was interned. For my part, I never knew any other reason than that he had expressed pro-French sentiments.

One day he was informed that he was to leave the jail for a French officers' internment camp. His departure was fixed for December 7th, 1915. During his short (?) sojourn among us Tager won the esteem of the prisoners of British nationality.

I was the only one, however, to whom he confided anything about himself. He informed me one day, in great confidence, that he was a Great Rabbi of Turkestan. Judging by the way he pronounced his title, one would believe that his rank in Mohammedan countries corresponded to that of a lord in England.

He entreated me not to reveal this to anyone.

Well, the British prisoners met together in a cell and decided to offer him a luncheon at the jail on the day of his departure. It was a formidable enterprise.

On the day fixed, a table of fifteen plates was laid in my cell. The plates, I need hardly remark, had to be set very close one to the other! At one o'clock, three of us went as a delegation to bring Tager, who did not understand what the whole thing meant.

Before luncheon, I told my British comrades that it was my intention to "reveal" to them, when the toasts were proposed, that our guest, Tager, was a Grand Rabbi of Turkestan, and although this did not mean anything to me or to them, I urged that they should display great enthusiasm at my disclosure and give Tager an ovation.

Luncheon was about to end, when I got up to propose the health of Tager. In concluding my speech, I duly informed my friends that I was about to create a sensation amongst them. Then, amid profound silence, I solemnly said that I deemed it my duty, notwithstanding the natural modesty of Mr. Tager, to reveal one of his titles to universal respect and admiration.

"Mr. Tager," I said, "is a Grand Rabbi of Turkestan, a fact which he has hidden from us."

On this statement, every one stood up and unfurled in a loud chorus of "bravos." Then, according to time-honored custom, the party led the popular refrain. "For he's a jolly good fellow."

We had scarcely got through the first part of the song when Hufmeyer, a non-commissioned officer, burst into my cell and called on us to stop. He was late, late, ever. We had then given full vent to our enthusiasm for Mr. Tager.

Liobknecht was not the only one to draw upon himself the wrath of the military authorities in 1915. I shall never forget the pathetic sight presented by a worthy old fellow who was interned with us for many months. He was Professor Franz Mehnert, a gentleman of seventy-one years of age. In April, 1915, Mehnert issued a proclamation in favour of an immediate peace. The proclamation contained not only his signature, but also those of Rosa Luxemburg and de Ledebour. This was sufficient to merit a taste of the Stadtvogel. Mehnert, like Borchardt, belonged to the Sprittracquet group of the revolution. He was a first baller, he enabled us to spend with him many interesting and never-to-be-forgotten hours. These names of Mehnert and Borchardt, of which I had guarded but a slight remembrance since the outbreak of importance since the revolution broke out in Germany. Mehnert remained for some time in the jail. After his liberation he became a candidate for the seat left vacant by Liobknecht at Potsdam. He was defeated, but his subsequent candidature had a happier sequel in his election for another constituency, to the Prussian Diet. He was returned by a large majority, and at the time of writing is a member of the Prussian Parliament.

SUNBURY HERO HONOURED

Pte. Norman F. Shannon Presented With Gold Watch.

Sunbury, Feb. 5.—On Friday evening, Jan. 31st, a public reception was given in the township hall to one of Sunbury's most heroic, loyal, and patriotic citizens in the person of Norman F. Shannon, who has lately returned home, after spending almost three years overseas, having enlisted in the 146 Battalion. A maximum crowd was on hand to welcome the returned hero and at eight o'clock, Dr. J. W. Edwards, M.P., who acted as chairman, came to the platform, and called upon the guest of the evening to come forward also. Dr. Edwards delivered an excellent address at the opening of the programme, which was followed by choruses, recitations, singing, duets, violin selections, and songs, ably rendered by the people of the vicinity. At the close of this complimentary address was read by Martin Sands to Mr. Shannon, and wishing him long life and prosperity. The address was signed on behalf of the committee by W. H. Sands, W. H. Webb, the presented Pte. Shannon with a solid gold watch and the recipient showed his appreciation by replying in a few well chosen words. Refreshments were afterwards served by willing hands, and dancing was indulged in, until the wee sma' hours of the morning.

When the heart gets into this condition, you become weak, worn and miserable, and are unable to attend to either social, business or household duties.

Mrs. Walter Greives, Apsley, Ont., writes:—"I had been run down, and doctors told me I was anemic, but did not help me with their medicines. I could not sleep nights, my heart palpitated so, and I could count every beat."

I used to have such dizzy spells I would have to go to bed. I was not able to do any work for eight months. A cousin of mine had taken Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and told me what they had done for her. I took eight boxes of them, and now I am able to help every day with the work. I am so thankful to tell others what they have done for me, so that they may try this great and wonderful remedy. I hope this may prove good to some one who is suffering the way I did."
