TALKING IT OVER With Lorna Moon

Those Wretched Little Things

"Oh, I know she is a perfect dear, and I'm sure that she did a lot of good at the front, and all that, and I've no doubt that her talk this afternoon will be very interesting, but if you don't mind I would rather be excused," begged the Feminist.

"There's a mystery about this," I insisted.

"No, not a mystery, just a reason so foolish that I'm almost ashamed to confess it."

I just cannot bear the way she clears her throat at the beginning of each remark. It holds me spellbound. I can't think what she is saying. I just count the words until she makes that noise again, and I have to restrain myself from doing it with her. You'll think I'm insane," she said apologetically, and we both burst into gales of laughter.

Those wretched little things, mannerisms of speech and gesture which detract so much from an otherwise pleasant personality. I know a very nice woman who has a habit of supplying words here and there as one speaks. It seems as if she cannot wait until one finds one's own means of expression, consequently she is forever putting the wrong words into one's mouth.

And there's a really pretty girl who has lost admirer after admirer, because of a peculiar trick she has of ending her laugh on a squeak. She attracts attention wherever she goes, much to the embarrassment of her escort, who usually decides to forego the pleasure of her company rather than let her place him so unpleasantly in the spotlight again.

It isn't fair to one's self to go through life with a handicap like that. It may not be necessary to go as far as my orator friend who had a moving picture and a dictaphone record made to find out why his audience seemed amused when he addressed them; but it isn't a bad idea to have frank friends pass one in review.

BAB OVERHEARS A DISTURBING CONVERSATION

CHAPTER XIII.

We still kept the apartment we had rented when we were first married. But we kept two servants, and when we entertained Neil always sent a map from the club to wait. We had a small car also, and I had Neil's suggestion—bought many new and expensive things for the house. But Neil constantly talked of the "deal" which soon would be "put through" and then we would give up our little apartment and go to one of the handsome new ones just built on the fashionable East side of town.

"It is silly to keep buying things if we intend to move," I said to him. "You know they never look the same in another place."

"We want to have things decent while we are here. We'll make a bon-fire of them when we go," he returned.

Of course I knew he did not mean that he would burn them, but that they would amount to so little when he had made the money he expected to, that they wouldn't count. So I went on buying beautiful things for the house and handsome clothes at the most expensive modistes.

Often when I looked into the glass I would wonder if I were the same girl who, only a little over a year ago, was satisfied to dress in muslins and gingham. Now nothing was too ultra for me to wear. I had acquired a certain style which seemed to call for extreme fashions, and as Neil never grumbled about the bills which were always sent to him, I had gradually grown more and more extravagant in my spending.

Not that I yet bought like some women we knew. I had neither expensive jewels or furs. But it costs a great deal for a woman to wear handsome evening and afternoon gowns, and to be correctly tailored for the street. Hats, boots and underwear all were of a kind I never had dreamed of possessing—very unlike the plain practical things I had in my simple trousseau.

Neil was becoming very uncertain in his hours. It annoyed me and I spoke of it to him.

"You are getting later and later for dinner, Neil. If you keep this up I soon shall not see you at all."

"He made no reply. During dinner I tried to get him to talk of what he was doing, but instead of this he talked of trivial matters.

He seemed to be regarding me critically, carefully. I had an impression that he was holding something back; that he was weighing every word he spoke.

The next day I recalled his manner at dinner when I overheard two men speak of him. I had gone into the Waldorf to wait for Lorraine Morton with whom I had agreed to lunch. I waited in the writing-room, and as I was a little ahead of time I busied myself by writing mother. On a settee near me were two men.

"I saw young Forbes this morning. He stopped me, and I must say he had two very peculiar men with him. Not his sort at all."

"Forbes' friends are not all distinguished, by any means," the other replied. "It seems a pity that some young men think that to be successful in business they have to do shady things or be intimate with those who do. In time they all go under together. Forbes comes of good stock. It's too bad. I wonder what kind of a wife he has."

Just then Lorraine came in and I heard no more. I called her attention to the two men and asked her if she knew them.

"Never saw them before. Why?"

"Do you know any other Forbes besides Neil?" I then asked.

"No—why again?"

"They were talking of some man named Forbes, and said he was of good stock. It seemed odd that I should hear them." I had no slightest intention of confiding in Lorraine Morton. But once more I had that sensation of forboding that I had experienced the day I lunched with Blanche Orton.

Lorraine shot a keen glance at me. It seemed to me there was some sort of meaning in her look. Then she asked:

"Does Neil—Mr. Forbes tell you about his business? Some men are very secretive I know. I should want to know every blessed thing about a man's business if I were his wife."

"To-morrow—One of Neil's Deals Goes Through."

HAD WEAK and FAINTING SPELLS.

These feelings of faintness, those weak, "all gone" sinking sensations, which come over some people from time to time, are warnings that must not go unheeded.

They mean an extremely weakened condition of the heart and a disordered nervous system.

When the system is in this condition there is no time for delay. One fainting spell may be recovered from—will the next? One dizzy spell may pass off, but the next may be more serious.

Those who are wise will start taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, before their case becomes deep rooted and perhaps hopeless.

They will act directly on the disordered heart and weakened nervous system and restore them to full strength and vigor.

Miss Mary McCoy, Algoma Mills, Ont., writes:—"I was awfully troubled with fainting and weak spells, and I could never get any doctor's medicines to help me. One day a friend of mine was at the house when I took one of those pills, and she got me a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. That was six years ago, and from that day to this I have never had any of those spells. I would not be without your pills for any money, and can highly recommend them to any one."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c a box at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The charges against M. R. McFarland, druggist, Almonte, for the sale of liquor on prescriptions alleged not to be complying with the Ontario Temperance Act were dismissed with costs.

The Hydro was turned on at Perth on Wednesday. There was no special ceremony. A number of the engineers of the Ontario Commission were present.

Industrial Commissioner.
