Working Both Ends.
War Correspondent Lincoln Eye tells of a rascally French inkeeper who had given a Sammie a bad piece of money. The incensed doughboy went back and demanded good money, and after some argument the inkeeper made good. Just as the doughboy was about to leave the inkeeper called him back.

"Pardon, monsieur, but will you kindly give me back the bad coin?" "Can't be done, Frenchy," chuckled the doughboy. "It took me three hours to pass it myself."

BAB ENCOUNTERS NEIL AND BLANCHE LUNCHING TOGETHER

CHAPTER XXXII.

The telephone shrilled.

"I'm coming for you to go to the museum with me. I'll be there in half an hour." Lorraine Morton's voice informed me. "There's a new picture hang that I want to see."

"I'll be delighted!" I told her, and I meant it. I knew I should be thinking of what had occurred between Neil and Mr. Scott; what had been said. Neil was determined to tell me nothing of his affairs; and so long as he refused, what was the use of making myself unhappy over them? I was convinced now that it was more because he was smarter than these other men, that they were in a sense jealous of his success, and that was the reason, and that only, why they had flung out their insinuations.

I really enjoyed the morning. Lorraine was always good company, even though she was inclined to gossip a little,—perhaps more interesting because of this! She insisted that I stay out and lunch with her. I was nothing loath, and we fixed upon Sherry's as the place where we could see more people we knew.

The head waiter, who knew us both, gave us a very nice table on the balcony, looking out upon the Avenue. We ordered and were waiting to be served, when, hearing a loud voice objecting to being given a certain table, I turned. To my surprise, the owner of the objecting voice proved to be Mr. Scott. Blanche Orton was his companion. They were finally seated to please him, but to my disappointment, where I could neither see nor hear them. I own frankly that I should have been glad to hear what they were talking of.

Why should they be together? Neil had said nothing of their knowing each other. Did he know it? If he did it was strange that he had not invited Mr. and Mrs. Orton to dinner the night before. No, I concluded he knew nothing of it. Just then I turned again toward where they were seated, and saw—Neil come in and join them!

Lorraine had not seen him. Should I tell her, or should I say nothing? I was positive that Neil had not seen us; that he would not, if I decided to go without letting him know I was there. But why should I act as if either of us were doing something we wanted to keep secret?

"Did you see Mr. Forbes, the gentleman who just sat down over at that corner table?"

"Yes, madam! I know Mr. Forbes quite well. I often wait upon him."

"Tell him, please, that his wife would like to speak to him."

"The garrulous waiter immediately crossed to Neil. He looked surprised, but rose and came over at once.

"Mrs. Orton has no need of two escorts, you come over here with us," I said, after he had spoken to Lorraine.

"That's impossible, much as I should enjoy it. I can't even ask you and Lorraine to join us. We are talking business today."

For the first time I noticed that he had an anxious look; the lines in his face were unusually prominent.

"But I thought you had finished with Mr. Scott!" I would not mention Blanche.

"Not by a good deal. He was told something this morning that seems to have upset him considerably. It is up to me to undo the mischief. Excuse me now, I must run back."

Lorraine told him to run along and be a good little boy and not flirt with Blanche Orton. I added "Be sure you remember."

But while we ate only one thing occupied my thoughts: Why was Blanche Orton with them?

TALKING IT OVER

With Lorna Moon

"It Isn't Practical"

Don't you long some days to be wildly extravagant—to buy organdy hats which cost a small fortune to clean, and white kid gloves instead of very sedate brown ones, and checked stockings at six dollars a pair, and crepe de chine nighties at twenty-five dollars

—oh!—some one might hear me—and I am supposed to be a very sensible woman!

But honest and true, do you believe that there is a daughter of Eve who does not hate the phrase "it isn't practical"? If there is a perfect duck of a tulle dress that you long to own, knowing that you will look like a bit of floating fluff in it, old mother common sense creeps up and whispers "it isn't practical," and so you turn your back on its fairy allure, and discuss the merits of taffeta with a level headed saleswoman who assures you that "it is SO practical, and can be worn on every occasion."

I know a mother of nine lovely children. She never has a single opportunity to fuss up and go out to functions. As a manager she is noted amongst her friends, her genius for spending money to advantage is demonstrated in the way she dresses the whole family on a very modest income. One day she was showing me how she had made a three-year-old serge coat into a school dress for daughter. I remarked, "You were lucky to have bought material that could be used both sides."

"That isn't luck. It's foresight. I never buy things for myself that can't be made over," then she added with a wry smile, "I'm PAINFULLY sensible as a rule, but—" she crossed to the bureau drawers and rummaged around in a corner of the bottom drawer, "here was once when I kicked over the traces," the color mounted to her cheeks as she unwrapped and showed me a pluck feather fan beautifully hand painted.

"I haven't the slightest use for it, but it is a sort of safety valve—when I get perfectly bored with my practical purchases I take this out and look at it—there is ONE thing that I can't make over—in fact I can't even USE it and it cost seven dollars, but it's worth every penny of it," she chuckled mischievously and tucked it back into the drawer.

I think it was worth seven dollars. Don't you?

RED ROSE TEA is good tea

THE British are noted as great tea drinkers and are naturally good judges of tea.

So when we learn that over 70% of the tea used in Great Britain is Indian tea we can be sure that Indian tea is of the very best quality.

In Canada the preference for Indian tea has become just as strong, as evidenced by the success of Red Rose Tea which consists chiefly of ASSAMS—the richest and strongest of Indian teas.

Red Rose is always sold in sealed packages.
