HIT HUBBY WITH WET MOP INCIDENTS OF THE DAY

PLEADED GUILTY TO CHARGE AND PAID FINE OF $1 AND COSTS.

Mrs. Lloyd said she struck her husband and chased him out of the house because he had ill-used her—Wayward had given Year in Reformatory.

"I am guilty," said Mrs. Mary Lloyd, in police court, on Monday morning, when she was charged with "assaulting and ill-treating" her husband.

"I struck him with a wet mop and chased him out of the house because he abused me," added Mrs. Lloyd.

"Do you want to hear the story," asked C. R. Webster, who appeared for hubby.

Magistrate Farrell was not anxious to go into the family history, stating that he thought a fine of $1 and costs would cover the fine. Mrs. Lloyd was ready to pay the fine, and did not appear to be the least disturbed over the proceedings.

Hubby was also present, but there was no "forgive and forget" as the case was disposed of. "It is quite apparent that the frost on the domestic window panes is quite thick at present."

The magistrate again took up the case of the three lads who were recently rounded up on a charge of burglary. One was sent to Burwash reformatory for one year, another was dismissed and the third remanded for a week.

The case of Ernest Withy, a former pay sergeant of "C" Battery, charged with forging the name of a man to the pay roll, was adjourned for the fourth time. It will be called again next Monday.

A couple of tipplers, gathered in over the week-end, were fined $10 and costs each. Both took an overdose of "strong stuff" which they had secured to knock out illness.

The Portsmouth Philosopher was on the job bright and early Monday morning, putting a brand new joke over his friends.
"Do you know the penitentiary bar is open," he asked, and of course everybody wanted to know all about it.
The Philosopher then explained that the water was running over the bar in the harbour at Portsmouth, but this did not comfort the thirsty ones.
