BAB HAS AN ERA OF COMPLETE HAPPINESS

CHAPTER XLIII.
Neil and I had often talked of the child which so soon was to come to us. I always returned to the subject with eagerness. At times I thought I detected something in Neil, a hint of something connected with his love for me, that seemed morbid. I was unable to put the idea from me, and determined to destroy it if possible. When I spoke of my fears, he said:
"I'm not really morbid, Bab. Yet it seemed to me that as I will take you from me—divide your love."
"Silly boy," I laughed at him. But, as always when Neil spoke of wanting all my love, it in a way comforted me. Surely no man would speak like that unless he loved the woman to whom he spoke. In my joy at my coming motherhood, I almost forgot that I ever had felt that anything could take Neil from me; or that I ever had doubted him in any way. Now he was so tender, so thoughtful. Not since the night when he came home so happily had I told me that "a very good friend" had made it impossible for Scott to harm his business, had he been once impatient or forgetful of me. I had a sensation of being wrapped about with love; a feeling that nothing would ever again make me unhappy.
There was one thing about Neil's and I supposed other men's, business methods that I could not bring myself to feel was necessary for success—albeit when I spoke of this, Neil patiently explained—or tried to explain to me: "It was the idea that late supper parties, at which much wine was drunk, motor rides to outlying inns where obnoxious dancing and hilarious gaiety was kept up until the wee small hours, and such pleasures, helped business."
In his confident manner Neil had expounded the methods by which he proposed to extend his business. With each detail that he described, I grew more certain that such means were unnecessary. When I said so, Neil only laughed at me, and said it wasn't to be expected I should know about such things.
Now this was his way in everything. He only talked to me of success; never did he, at this time, mention that he was ever anxious or worried. He spent money lavishly, as always—more than lavishly for my comfort.
"I am falling in love with you all over again, Neil," I said to him, "yet how can I when I never have fallen out."
"Just beginning to appreciate your luck?" he questioned, with a laugh. "It is too bad you had to wait five years to find out what a prize you had found in your matrimonial package."
"But honestly, dear, I am so frightened sometimes, I love you so much."
"You'll soon only get half, so don't worry."
In all the years that came after, I have looked back upon this time as one of the happiest in my life. Coming after a period of worry and questioning anxiety, it was all the

CHILDREN ARE IN DANGER

PARENTS AND TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION SEEKS PROTECTION.
Fast Travelling Automobiles on Union Street Liable to Injure Children—Motor League to Act Immediately.
The Parents and Teachers' Association of Victoria school is asking that some action be taken to protect the children attending that and other schools from the dangers of fast travelling automobiles.
The matter has been brought to the attention of the Motor League and action has already been taken by that body to protect the children. Signs with "Caution" and "Danger" are to be erected near the schools if satisfactory arrangements can be made with the city council. These signs will warn the motorist, and offenders will then have no excuse from not taking proper care.
Victoria school is badly situated with reference to the street railway and automobile traffic. Both lines are very close to the children's play grounds, and nothing protects them from serious danger. The road signs will have a decided effect in making motorists slow down on the Union street stretch past the junction and many have been guilty of running very fast on this piece of comparatively good road.
The whole matter will be taken up and discussed at the next Motor League meeting, as the conditions in this city absolutely demand that immediate action be taken to protect school children who heedlessly run out into the road. At the same time the question of erecting "Zone of Quiet—Hospital" signs for the prevention of unnecessary noise, particularly the using of a cut-out, near the hospitals, will be brought up and measures taken to correct this trouble.

CROCUSES

This is the month of crocuses in England. I can see the old vicar limping down the gravel path of his garden, start in hand, pushing to stir a crust of snow very gingerly—for you can never tell where a little yellow or purple head is hidden. In his wake follows a life companion, dear old lady she listens to the joys and sorrows of every soul in the parish, her lace cap looks very festive this morning with three silk violets sewn across the front; and if you know those violets and the cap, you will know that this also is a sign that spring is coming, for in the winter three pearl beads cling to the very places that the violets occupy so confidently at this moment. She has a bird like briskness and she reaches the vicar's side like a fussy sparrow, eager to general his manoeuvres with the staff. She takes it from his hand and reaches forward dislodges a wide thin layer of ice to reveal four little yellow heads. "There," she says triumphantly, and with that word takes credit for their creation as well as their discovery.
I love crocuses. I think it is so brave of them to get right on preparing for spring when the snow is still upon the ground, to grow and unfold their leaves while the icy grip of winter is still upon them. There is nothing timid-souled about the crocus. It is the spartan, the pioneer, the optimist of the flower

Big Railway Votes.
Ottawa, March 26.—Estimates which will shortly be proceeded with in parliament, provided out of the railway vote $13,500,000 for improvements and extension in the west of the Canadian National Railway system. Of this amount $9,500,000 will be spent on construction, and $4,000,000 in betterments.
The plans provide for 420 miles of new road, mainly in Saskatchewan and Alberta, and about half in each province. In most cases the projected lines are already graded, though some of the work to be undertaken is entirely new. The roads are all branches of extensions of branches.

Swiss Cancel Treaties.
Bern, March 26.—The Swiss Federal Council has renounced the commercial treaties with Germany, Austria and Hungary, so that she would not be hindered in the negotiations to renew the commercial treaties with France, Italy and Spain.
Even hard cash will melt sooner or later.
