FELDSPAR MINES TO OPEN

EUREKA FLINT AND SPAR CO. CONDUCT SMALL OPERATIONS.

No Intention of Shipping Until the Market Becomes Settled, as There is No Demand.

With reference to the closing of the Feldspar mines throughout the county, the Whig interviewed on Tuesday J. Spar Company. Mr. Wilkes, while not optimistic in his views for the market in the near future, stated that he was opening up on a very small scale so as to provide employment for some members of his staff. The market was such that it was not considered likely that any spar will be sold for some time, but the directors of the company had been convinced that everything possible should be done to protect their own workers and were willing to run to keep the men employed and not force them to leave the district.

At present the demand for Feldspar is met by importations from Carolina and Maryland. The local mines were not able to meet this competition, as the railways had jumped the rate over 100 per cent. during the war, and until the produce of the mines was put on the old basis or there was some other great change in the situation to meet the difference in price it is not probable that there will be much activity.

The International Feldspar Company has shipped a few cars this year and a few of the other companies are making some progress. The price at the factories does not warrant any big production or shipment yet.

The mica situation is not very lively as the buyers are content to wait until the Indian mica can be secured. This completes the wind up of the local mica in spite of the long haul as the labor is a very small consideration.

THEATRICAL

"Bringing Up Father at Home."

Have you ever grown to love a personage or celebrity until you imagine you almost know them well enough to call them by their first name—even though you may never have met them nearer than the columns of the newspapers or the inside of a book. Of course you are so acquainted with "Father," the good old Irish parent in George McManus' world-famous cartoons, "Bringing Up Father." If you aren't, then surely you have been quite negligent and missed a treat that has been the enjoyment of countless millions here and throughout the world. See it Wednesday, matinee and night, at the Grand. Manager Gus Hill was the first man to discover the wonderful qualities of "Father" as a stage character, and it was through his efforts that the general public was treated to an intimate view of the remainder of this illustrious and justly adorable family.—Adv.

Extra Attraction at Grand.

All roads should lead to the Grand on Thursday night when the new high-class standard of attractions will go into force and for the feature picture, Julia Arthur, the famous stage star, will be in her latest mammoth release, "The Cavell Case." This truly wonderful film is the talk of the season, and at present its presentation in Toronto is meeting with signal success. As this production is authentic in every respect and the scenes taken in France it should prove to be a picture well worth seeing. Besides this amazing film that should thrill all who see it, there will be three acts of the highest class vaudeville obtainable. This announcement of more vaudeville in Kingston has aroused much comment, and people are patiently waiting to see how the Grand will compare with the shows of other cities. The feature picture, special comedies, a news weekly and the superior vaudeville will make a bill that none can rival and it should be the talk of the town.—Adv.

At the Strand.

Monty Price's last words after the fight in which the odds against him were three to one, glimpse the dashingly fearless and confident spirit of fearlessness and contempt for danger which Zane Grey puts into the character of his thrilling romance, The Light of Western Stars. Monty in his contempt for underhand tricks and treachery lashes Pat Howe and his two henchmen with vituperation while he awaits fearlessly the shot that may any moment close his lips. Monty Price crouched lower, hands at his hips as he edged inch by inch closer to his foe. His breath came quicker, his voice grew hoarser. Lower and lower he bent, a terrible figure of ferocity. "Dogs, skunks, buzzards, flash 'em or I'll flash mine." The thrilling sequel forms one of the many striking scenes in Dustin Farnum's great picture, "The Light of Western Stars," which comes to the Strand Theatre to-day, Tuesday and Wednesday.—Adv.

At Griffin's.

A large audience assembled at this popular playhouse last evening, and witnessed one of the best programs ever exhibited here in many a day. Elsie Ferguson in "His Parisian Wife," headlines the bill, and is most marvellously beautiful in this picture. In the latest French gowns she startles a puritan New England town. And through all the intense scenes, flashes the big, grand star she is, Wallace Reid in "The Dub," also came in for a goodly share of the honors last evening, when numerous admirers turned out to see the first showing of his latest picture. This is one of his best, and a typical Reid photoplay with plenty of action and thrills. You will make no mistake in seeing this programme if looking for photodramatic entertainment of the highest order, and a visit to Griffin's either to-night or to-morrow will well repay you.
