You are up against something disagreeable when you have to do with the natural-education fool. Sometimes we forget that health transgressions, as well as those of law, are punishable.

THE ISLE OF MAN.

Pretty Little Island Has Long History.

The Isle of Man, the little island with a long history, with a constitution and its own and many jealously guarded rights and privileges set in the midst of the Irish Sea, almost equidistant from the three kingdoms, has had its own troubles during the war. In the days of peace these three kingdoms supplied the island, all summer long, with copious streams of visitors. They came for the day, arriving on one boat and going back on the next. They came, above all, for the week end, a long week end or a short week end, and many of them came to stay for weeks and months together. But the war, which discouraged holiday making anywhere, discouraged it especially in the Isle of Man. The Government wanted the ships, for one thing, and for another, there were the submarines.

All that, however, is now a thing of the past, and Manxland is bestirring itself for the coming of the visitors once again. And they will surely come, for the Isle of Man has for many people an indefinable charm all its own. It is much more of an undertaking, much more of an adventure, than any mere railway journey. The Manx boats are quite big boats, the voyage from the nearest mainland quite a considerable one, some fifty or sixty miles or more, whilst the Irish Sea is often no mill pond. Then there is all the quaint charm of the island's independence, its famous Council, its House of Keys, its Tynwald Court, and its long story full of "little great events," stretching back into that grand time when anything might have happened, when Baetan MacCarroll was King of Ulster, when the Columbia was setting sail with the faithful twelve from Denny to Iona, and Augustine was planning his journey to Kent.

That was the Celtic period, for hitherto the story of the island had lain in three periods. In the first of these the Isle of Man was inhabited by the Isle people. The next is marked by the Viking invasions and the establishment of Scandinavian rule. The third period is that of the English dominion. But in all three periods, up to a hundred years ago, Man went through troublous times. The kings of Norway, the kings of Scotland, the kings of England, the Rousheads, and the Cavaliers, all in their turn, fought for possession of the island, and all in turn did possess it. The island actually fell to the British crown in 1299, and, in 1406, Henry IV made a grant of it to Sir John Stanley, "his heirs and assigns on the service of rendering two falcons or paying homage and two falcons to all future kings of England on their coronation." So the Stanleys became lords of Man, and after they had reigned in it for more than 300 years the sovereignty of the island passed, in 1736, to James Murray, second Duke of Atholl, and, from the Atholls, having meanwhile become a terrible place for smugglers, it was finally taken over by the British Government. That was in 1828. The ancient laws and tenures of the island were not interfered with, and ever since the final settlement of 1866, when a measure of home rule was confirmed to the island, Man has been singularly happy. It is a place of singular beauty, a land of mountains, hills, and glens, with the sea never very far away. And the hills are always strangely soft in outline, always in green to the summit, whilst all the coast, from Peel round by the Calf of Man, past Castletown and Douglas to Maughold Head, near Ramsey, presents a picture of rugged grandeur which becomes a treasured memory to those who have seen it.

Fond of Animals.
A Sunday school teacher asked a little child: "What do you know about Solomon?" "He was very fond of animals," the child replied. "Yes? Why do you think so?" said the teacher. "Because the Bible tells us," said the child, "that he had a hundred wives and nine hundred porcupines."

Somehow our fool mistakes never get into our dairies.

Moss Prevents Sudden Floods.
In mountainous and wet districts tracts of moss are of great service in retaining the water and preventing sudden floods.

Some people want to let it stop with the telling of what they are about to do.

The gospel of help and love and consideration is all that one needs to live by and die by.

Canada's Largest Factories Use Dominion Friction Surface Belting

In practically every first class factory in Canadian industry, Dominion Friction Surface Belting is a satisfactory and efficient part of its equipment. Some of the largest users of transmission belting specify it exclusively.

The reason for this preference is obvious—it will out-serve at lower cost per horse power any belt made. It will conserve power and labor and speed up production.

A broad statement, yes, but our belting experts are ready to convince you that it is more than a statement.

The knowledge and experience of these experts are largely responsible for the "plus service" rendered by Dominion Friction Surface Belting because it is their business to see that the correct type of belt is specified for a given purpose.

Many of Canada's largest manufacturers have found this service so profitable that they have made our experts responsible for the efficiency of all belting equipment in their plants.

This same service of efficiency is open to you, without charge, through any of our Service Branches.
