BOOKS

THE MERRYMAKERS IN NEW YORK.

By Herschel Williams. 321 pages.
Price, $1.50. The Page Company,
Boston, publishers.

The Merry-makers are not a troupe of vaudeville artists, as the name seems to suggest, but a family of joyous and real live children whose name is really suggestive of their nature. Born of their parents at an early age, the burden of caring for them falls upon the oldest son and daughter, who both work hard to bring the four younger children up to be bright, useful citizens. The oldest brother, Ned, is a reporter on a large New York paper, and he invites the four children to spend Christmas with him in the city. They arrive from their country home, and are at first overwhelmed with the size of the city and the sights to be seen there. They are accommodated at the boarding establishment of Mrs. O'Brien, and from that day there until the last they devote their energies to enjoying themselves and to making other people do likewise. They have many exciting and amusing adventures, and meet many strange and splendid people during their visit, and the whole of their experiences is a very enjoyable one.

There is much real humor and mirth in this book. It is a book of children meant to be read by grown-up people, for in it they will find much that is wholesome and good. The characters are all lovable, from the little mother, Margie, right down to mischievous Rex, the youngest and most irresponsible of the four. There is a healthy moral running through every page, the moral of making the world a brighter, happier place for everyone with whom the children come in contact. This is done in many ways, and at some self-denial, especially when Jean, the youngest girl, hands over her big prize doll to a grandchild of the landlady as a peace offering. The spirit of the story is one which, alas, is too seldom met with in real life, but it is refreshing to read of the doings of this family of Merry-makers when they take the boarding house by storm and give a New Year party for all the little children of the neighborhood. The writer has performed a real service in publishing her story, for it is one which is much needed in these busy days, when so little time is spent on sentiment and the lighter things of life. The lightness of the story is its greatest charm, and the Page Company seem to have picked a story that is so unusual that it is at once attractive.

MA PETTENGILL.

By Henry Leon Wilson. 324 pages.
Price, $1.50. McClelland & Stewart, Toronto, publishers.

Harry Leon Wilson sprang into the limelight some time ago when he wrote "Ruggles of Red Gap," a book dealing with life on a Western cattle ranch. In his newest production, "Ma Pettengill," he has written a series of stories of the same kind, dealing with the famous Arrowhead ranch of Red Gap. The same characters play the leading part, and the stories are human and humorous to a high degree. Ma Pettengill is the mistress of the Arrowhead ranch, and she is a striking personality. Her days are spent in the saddle for the most part, or on one of the many duties which fall to her lot, but with the close of the day's work she once again becomes a woman, and returns to the feminine point of view. The stories in the book are her stories, chosen from a largely stocked memory of amusing and exciting incidents.

The stories, of which the book contains eleven, are distinctive works of literary art. They are full of the atmosphere of the plains and the western civilization. One of them, "Red Gap and the Big League Stuff," tells of an attempt to introduce New York customs into the cowboy town, an attempt which did not survive for long. The talk of Ma Pettengill, which really composes the tales, ranges over a large variety of subjects. She talks of cattle breeding, elephant ranching, movie stars, Cinnamon cooks, and a host of other subjects with equal facility, and is a most versatile character. To read these stories is to be transported into a strange land, a land of humorous adventure, a land in which there is never any lack of incident, and a land where "Ma" reigns supreme over her collection of ranchers. The book is a delightful one, and as it is easily read, is just the thing for holiday reading.

"More Pep" For May

In a bright green cover, with a design symbolical of the name, "More Pep" for May has now made its appearance. The design for this month's issue is splendidly in keeping with the time of the year, and at once strikes a responsive chord in the mind of the reader. As one opens the book, the favorable impression is at once increased by the snappy way in which the pages are set up. Every line stands out in clear type, and the arrangement is the work of an artist in printing. Before having read a word, any one who picks up "More Pep" realizes that here is something very different and above the average.

The contents are full of interest, and the material suggested by the name "More Pep." The articles are all of a style which are very useful to any man who wishes to make a success of his business in life, no matter what that business might be. "Let Cheerfulness Abound" is the heading which appears on the first page of reading matter, followed by an article on how to keep cheerful. Once more the effect is a happy one, and the reader turns over page after page to find that he has here a house organ that is far better than the usual. This absorbing little book is printed and published by the British Whig Publishing Company, and can be had on application by mail or by calling at the Whig office. A feature

Notes of Interest to Booklovers

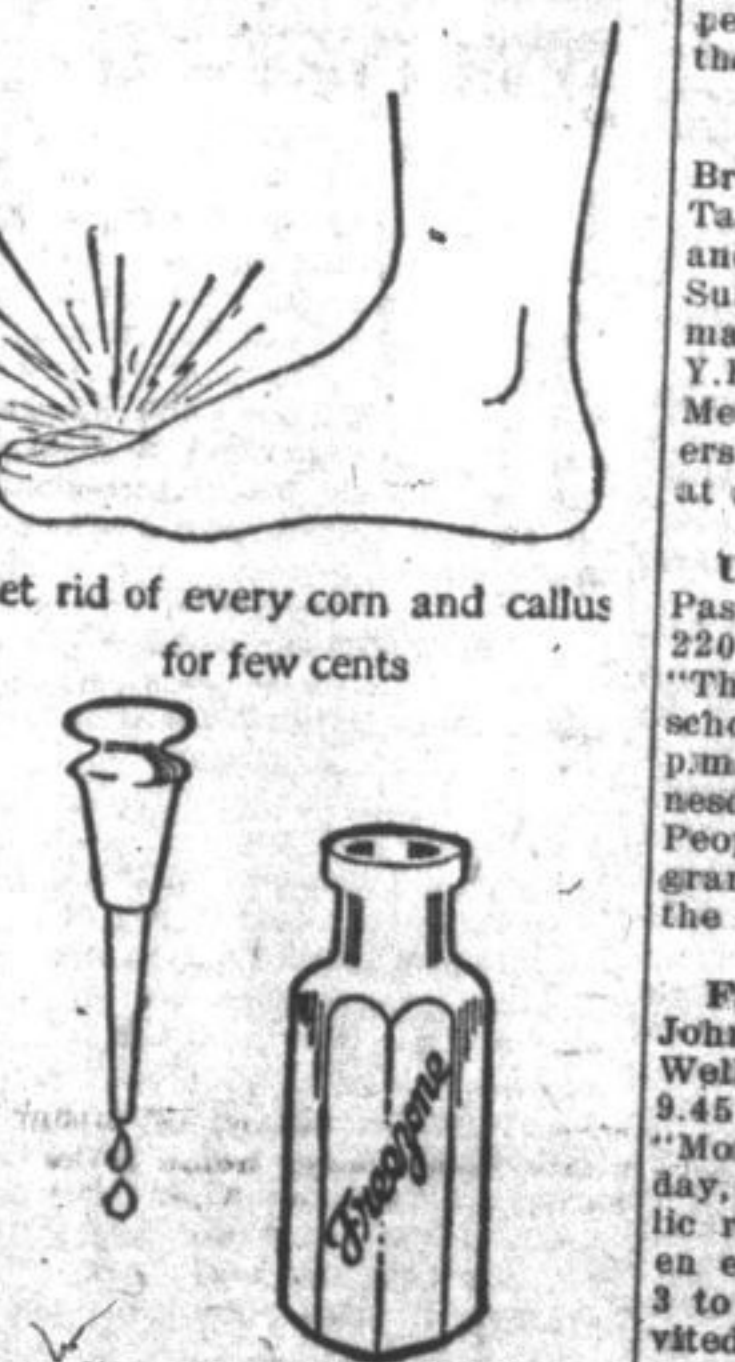

"Bluegrass and Broadway" is the title of a new novel by Maria Thompson Davells, which the Century Company has just published.

Mrs. Edna Worthley Underwood, author of "Letters From a Prairie Garden," spent a whole year studying a certain orchid in preparation for the writing of a short story to be part of her next book. Botanists have given highest praise to the result of this work.

John Galsworthy, who came to the United States to take part in the Lowell centenary, and afterward made a lecture tour through the eastern half of the country, donated the net profits of his lectures, amounting to four thousand dollars, to the fund for Armenian and Syrian relief. Mr. Galsworthy has now returned to England.

Under the title "The Home and the World," the Macmillan Company announces for publication Sir Rabindranath Tagore's first long novel. The three principal characters are a lady proprietor of a school, his wife and an agitator. The plot revolves around the opposing claims upon husband and wife of their home life and of the world outside. The book is said to give an intimate picture of Indian home life and character.
