NEIL TELLS BARBARA THAT HE WANTS HER TO GIVE A SMART AFFAIR

CHAPTER II
Neil made no reply to my plea for forgiveness and love. I said no more as I was thoroughly convinced that something very out of the ordinary had happened to make him act as he was doing. It was no simple headache which had brought him home in the middle of the day, something he never had done before. He had been unlike himself for days. It had been obvious as an eye for him to appear natural before his aunt, or to join in the conversation. He had been self-centered, absent-minded. Had Frederick's refusal to go in this last deal with him caused others to fall out, and was he worried about that? He had said nothing about economizing so it could not be money. I had been quietly cutting down my expenses wherever I could. I had finished a complete inventory of everything in the house. I hoped to be able to remain in my beautiful home if we could do so honestly; but I also hoped Neil would be willing to change our manner of living if it were necessary.

Aunt had spoken of ending her visit soon. I hoped she would. She was very observant. Very little escaped her, and she never hesitated to question both Neil and me. I was very fond of her as was Neil; but I could see he resented her questions, that she was beginning to make him nervous. I wanted her to go, yet I knew I should miss her. Ever since I had invited Mr. and Mrs. Powers and they had sent regrets I had been too depressed over any social success that I had felt I might as well give up entertaining entirely. Aunt and I often had been alone at dinner, and for the evening. If Neil persisted in remaining out, I should be entirely alone after she left. The prospect was not at all alluring. "We'll give one more dinner before Aunt goes," Neil had said to me and while I had not objected, I had made no plans for going on with it. It now recurred to me and I said: "Shall we give the dinner you spoke of before you and leaves?" "Yes, and invite everyone you know who is anybody. Give a bang-up affair." I was surprised at his animation. He had seemed so depressed. "How many covers?" "Oh, twelve or fourteen, then have

Need of Ministers.
Ottawa Journal.
To those who would say that the world has outgrown its need of ministers, Dr. Herridge furnished proofs in the course of his farewell sermon at St. Andrew's, that the vocation of preaching would never become superfluous until the millennium.
"As long as sorrow finds a home amongst us," he said: "as long as there are any clouds of doubt upon the soul's horizon; as long as death snatches away not only those of a good old age, but those upon whom earth's prospects are just opening; as long as sin plays havoc with our noblest faculties; as long as there is any hope left of pardon and release from evil by the might of infinite love, so long will the messenger of truth have a vocation which can not become superfluous until all men have received the glorious gospel of the Lord, and felt its inspiration uplifting them."
"With the passage of time, creeds may change. Some of them are bound to change and ought to change. But the world can never outgrow those spiritual longings which seek their fulfillment in God."
Perhaps, in the ordinary course of things, you had not intended to make a trip to a particular store to-day. Yet such a trip may be highly desirable—a little thrift-journey. See the ads.
It's well to be consistent, but too many people possess the consistency of mush.
All some women talk about is—well, about eighteen hours a day.

This disease usually plays havoc with the hair. The inflammation in the hair follicles is usually self-limiting, but occasionally it persists, causing alarming hair loss. There is no bottled magic for this condition, but the intelligent use of Herpicide with patience, will greatly minimize the harm. We have very encouraging reports. Herpicide should be in every home—it is the most dependable hair saver and the most exquisite and dainty hair dressing—Does not stain or dye the hair.

TALKING IT OVER

—With Lorna Moon—

Chastening the Rattle Brain. One of these days I am going to read the Rattle Brain lecture, and then, I suppose, I shall lose forever the little hold I have on her.

She isn't really as brainless as she sounds, although I admit that she has no over dose of grey matter. She is pretty, very pretty, in that wide eyed baby vampire way that advertises space to let on the top floor. But she over advertises, there isn't nearly as much vacant space as her looks lead one to believe.

No, she isn't being bombarded with proposals of marriage, that is the funny part of it! She is bombarded with invitations to dinner, and with flowers, and also, alas! with the invitations that make nice girls long for a six foot brother.

eight, and she has not received one proposal of marriage. The Rattle Brain has her own ideas about what an interesting conversation should be; it consists of admiring remarks about her hair, her eyes, and her mouth, and when the conversation would seem to be turning away from these points she swiftly yanks it back. I once made the mistake of talking her to a studio tea, she rattled about herself for an hour, and focused the amused attention of that brainy assembly upon herself, during the whole time she was there. She thought she had made a profound impression. She had!

I ventured to suggest that it was not the best taste, to relate the compliments men had paid one, to a roomful of people like that; she turned from me with a shrug saying, "Oh, not a studio tea, she rattled about herself for an hour, and focused the amused attention of that brainy assembly upon herself, during the whole time she was there. She thought she had made a profound impression. She had!"

Cleric's Advice to Brides.
A country clergyman is noted for the good counsel he gives to the young couples he weds, says Tit Bits. He keeps printed cards of advice, which he distributes, besides offering guidance verbally. One of the cards is for the man, and the other for the woman. That to the bride runs as follows:

When you marry him, love him. After you marry him, study him. If he is honest, honor him. If he is generous, appreciate him. When he is sad, cheer him. When he is cross, amuse him. When he is talkative, listen to him. When he is quarrelsome, ignore him. If he is noble, praise him. If he is confidential, encourage him. If he is secretive, trust him. If he is jealous, coax him. If he cares naught for pleasure, amuse him. If he favors society, accompany him. If he does you a favor, thank him. When he deserves it, kiss him. Let him think how well you understand him; but never let him know how you "manage" him.

Atlantic City Air Port.
In the heart of Atlantic City, N.J., lies a large level field that is soon to become the first "air port" in the world, says the June Popular Mechanics Magazine. Starting from this port, air craft will be registered, and will receive their clearance papers, exactly as with ships of the sea. This feature will no doubt be most prominent in the future when regular trans-Atlantic flight is assured. Of present importance, however, are several other purposes announced by the three aerial associations behind the scheme. The field is intended as an aerial mail and police station for Atlantic City; it will serve as an aerial garage, and it will be a terminal for the coming New York-Atlantic City passenger service.

Promises that are hardest to obtain are surest of fulfillment.
