THEATRICAL.

At The Grand.
Last evening an exceptional programme of feature photoplays and superior vaudeville was offered to the large crowd which patronized the cool atmosphere of the Grand Opera House. Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox Baby Grands, appeared in a five-act feature, "Smiles." This picture is filled with mirth and laughter, and has an absorbing plot with gentle love strains intermingled to provide a most enjoyable and amusing story. There are many thrills involved in this play, the principal startling event being an accidental flight by airplane of the two children, and a drop in a parachute. The good comedy reels included Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in "Oh, Ethel," and Mutt & Jeff in a cartoon, "To the Rescue." The Screen Magazine was also shown with the latest news of the day. Big-time vaudeville, better than usual, was presented and drew much worthy applause; it consisted of five young ladies in a very entertaining act combining music, laughter and the latest song hits. This excellent bill will be repeated to-night and to-morrow afternoon and evening.—Advt.

At The Strand.
It is only human to be delighted with the pretty face and dainty ways of the heroine, or follow on the screen with admiring gaze the well-bred ease and manly bearing of the handsome sutor for her hand. But there is a fascination, too, in the cleverly wrought out characterization which depends for its effect on experienced artistry and carries true to the observer the sense of vitality, truthness to life, and, in a word, conviction. Such a characterization is that of Brown, the old ferryman in "A Man in the Open," as played by Joseph Dowling in support of Dustin Farnum. His stooping shoulders, weather-beaten face, shifty hands clutching the ferry horse and the swift sweeping eyes as a danger threatens on the receding bank, his feverish haste to cross the stream, and glowing satisfaction as he hitches his float safe on the farther side—such and much more is depicted with convincing lifelike art by this master actor. "A Man in the Open," with Dustin Farnum, will be presented at the Strand Theatre to-day.—Advt.

At Griffin's.
Jack Pickford in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," proved highly entertaining to the audience who saw the initial showing of this picture at Griffin's last evening. The production abounds in humorous situations and side-splitting incidents. Louise Huff appears as the "Flapper," the engaging young daughter of Bunker's millionaire boss whom he marries in a fit of abstraction, thinking himself to be the reincarnated form of Napoleon. Dainty Ann Murgock also contributed a goodly portion of enjoyment to the programme in "The Richest Girl." Youth and optimism is the keynote of Miss Murgock's character and she finds full vent in this charming comedy. Don't fail to see this bill, either to-night or to-morrow.—Advt.
