The Promoter's Wife

NEIL HAS THE OFFER OF TWO POSITIONS

CHAPTER CXXIII.

After Mr. Frederick left I tidied up, Neil insisting upon drying the dishes. Then we sat in the living room talking of our guest, his kindness, and the feeling of security he had left behind as far as the immediate future was concerned.

Neil had told him—in reply to his questions—that it had taken every cent we had in the world to pay our debts. We were poorer than when as boy and girl we started out together. We had worn our clothes until now I was really shabby, although I had insisted that Neil be properly dressed because of his position. We lived in a rented house, not even owning the furniture. We were both over thirty years old, and save for his unhappy experiences Neil had nothing to show for the years of hard work. When I thought of this I wondered that he was as cheerful as he was; that he did not more often give way to discouragement.

"What are you going to do now, still live out here?" Mr. Frederick asked.

"Yes, Bab likes it, it is good for Robert, and we can live more cheaply. Quite a consideration."

"Have you decided what you will do?" I looked in amazement from one to the other. Was Neil to lose his place with Frederick? I was soon enlightened. Mr. Frederick had seen my look of surprise, and added: "Hasn't he told you, Barbara? Chase has offered him a fine position, at a much larger salary than the position with me warrants. My resources have been pretty well drained, and my western interests have suffered by my long absence—he was one of the government's dollar a year men—I should like to meet Chase's figures but can't."

"Yes, I have decided. I said nothing to Bab because there was nothing to say. I shall remain with you as long as you can find a place for me."

"Thank you, Forbes. I never needed faithful service as I do now. Such service may mean the saving of my fortune—what is left, and my business. I know of no one else whom I could leave in charge. I shall have to depend as entirely upon you for this eastern end as I have during the war. My time must be spent on the coast. I am almost ashamed to offer you the salary I have decided I can pay at the present. It's mighty little considering how you have slaved for me the past two years."

"Not entirely for you," Neil smilingly replied. "Uncle Sam was my employer too, and he urged me on you know."

"Can you live on five thousand a year for a time until I can get my affairs back on a paying basis?—paying for me." He looked from one to the other of us, as if I too might have something to say.

"I both can and will. And Mr. Frederick I never have been able to tell you one half of how grateful I am to you, to express my feilings for what you have done for us. I am not going to try now. But if you had offered me one thousand I should have taken it and remained with you."

"I believe it, Forbes. Although you aren't being quite fair to yourself in sticking to me. Chase offered him ten thousand, Barbara."

I gasped. Anton Chase was one of the big manufacturers of the country. That he had offered Neil, a man who had been accused of being dishonest only a few years before, a position of trust proved how thoroughly Neil had rehabilitated himself in the business world. That he had said nothing to me of the offer proved how truly he recognized the help Frederick had given him, and his determination to prove his gratitude.

"Aren't you proud of your husband?" he continued lightly, the situation was becoming tense with feeling. "I should be if I were in your place. But you must talk it over with him Barbara. It will mean quite a difference to you as well as to him," he added without giving me time to reply to his question.

"Indeed I am proud of him. And I need no time to talk it over. He has done exactly right in every particular. We shall feel very wealthy now with the salary you offer, because it will be all ours to use as we please. We don't owe a penny, and so can begin to live riotously."

"You are a real wife Barbara. If more men married women like you there would be fewer divorces; fewer unhappy homes. God bless you both," he finished solemnly for him, then said goodbye, leaving my cheeks still burning because of his compliment.

"Frederick is right, Bab. You are a true helpmeet," Neil said as we turned back into the house when we could no longer see Mr. Frederick or his car.

To-morrow—Planning a New Life.

TALKING IT OVER

--With Lorna Moon--

Dame Thrift

Thrift is such a hard faced, unwieldy word, it seems to bristle with different ways of doing without things. I am frank to confess, that the world and I have only the merest nodding acquaintance. But just the same, I have a great respect for it when I meet it.

And I met it the other day in the story of Hattie and Henry. Hattie is the cook for a friend of mine; and Harry is the gardener for another friend. Hattie and Henry are going to be married.

My friend who employs Hattie greeted me the other day jokingly. "You don't happen to have a cook in your hand bag, do you? Hattie is going to leave me, I've promised to go out to-day and look at her home. Will you come with me?"

That was how I learned the story, and met the word Thrift, and saw the magic it could accomplish if you take hold of its coat tails and hold on, no matter how it tugs to get away from you.

Hattie was glad to tell me all about it. Henry and she had put all their savings into buying a lot the first years of their engagement. That accomplished, they saved to buy furniture and make the first payment on a cottage. The cottage is now almost completed, and the payments have been so arranged that they come monthly, and are more than the young couple have to pay for a cottage if they rented it. Henry had worked on the garden until it is a perfect little bower of loveliness, and tucked away in a corner is a vegetable garden.

Hattie showed me her linen which she had hemstitched every bit by hand, and her silver which had been collected bit by bit, a fork and knife here, and a spoon there, all in the same good conventional pattern.

They are starting life with a clean slate, and I am sure that their lamp of romance will burn all the more brightly because the wick has been trimmed by that plain faced hard handed lady, Dame Thrift.

Mrs. Olive Johns, wife of Albert H. Johns, died on Friday at Belleville, after being ill for some time. Deceased was in her fifty-third year and was a daughter of John Haslip, Cannifton.

GERALDINE LAIRD

Took Her Husband "For Granted."

Once she was married, it never occurred to her to love any other man. It never occurred to her that he would love any other woman! And so of course, it never occurred to her to make any special effort to hold his love.

Then came the awakening. Of course it was another woman, dark-eyed and dainty, exquisitely dressed, clever, at least clever enough to make a man think her irresistable. And Geraldine felt her universe toppling about her ears. She remembered—too late—the numerless small things she might have done to please him. He liked her in pretty clothes for instance, it was carelessness, not lack of money that made her go about in old ones.

But gradually, out of the wreck of her unhappiness, she built up a truer conception of marriage. Do you want to know what it was It's in "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" which starts in the Whig on Saturday, July 5th.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Walton, Brockville, when their daughter, Miss Alice Clorinde, was united in marriage to Philip Garman, Ph. D., Maryland State College.

Miss E. O'Neil, Chesterville, has been appointed to the position of physical culture specialist and teacher of upper history at the Brockville Collegiate Institute.

Mr. Wallace, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wallace, Frankford, dropped dead while walking up the railway track. Mr. Wallace was only twenty years old.

At Clayton, N. Y., on Wednesday, at the home of the bride's parents, occurred the marriage of Miss Inez Graves and Francis Tiffany, Philadelphia.

GOWN BY LADY DUFF GORDON

This gown of striking lines is of blue poulette, hand-embroidered in same shade and panels edged with ball trimming.

SHOULD MATCH THE CAMISOLE

Combination of Brilliant Colors Does Not Add to Attractiveness of Well-Dressed Woman.

Is anything uglier than the transparent peplum blouse worn with a light camisole or corset cover? It was bad enough with the oldtime blouse that ended at the beltline, but when the newer type of blouse is worn thus there is an ugly discrepancy between the waist section and the skirt section of the blouse.

Of course, where the front and back panel of the blouse are of some heavier material the effect is quite satisfactory. But when georgette or chiffon is used, then one really needs a dark camisole. It is not always easy to buy these, although they are to be had in navy blue, one or two shades of brown, green and the other usual suit shades. But they are not difficult to make, and you should have one or two to go with every suit.

Soft satin of some sort is a good selection for the fabric, although crepe de chine is also good. They can be finished at the top with machine hemstitching, such as you can have done at a dressmakers' supply store, and the shoulder straps may either be made of ribbon to match or some of the fabric finished with a narrow hemstitching of the same sort. Needless to say, they should be adjusted so that none of the lighter lingerie appears above the dark camisole.
