The Luck of Geraldine Laird

BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

Author of "The Story of Julia Page," "Heart of Rachel," "Josselyn's Wife," "Sisters," etc.

There was a stir at the door, and the confused murmur of the room died down under the clear, laughing accents of a strange voice, heard in the passage.

"Louis—you disgraceful boy—you've compromised me! You kept me driving so late—I wonder you can look me in the face!"

Louis Redding's eager, nervous laugh sounded in answer, and then on a little wave of merry protests, apologies, and accusations, he returned to the studio, accompanied by the stately figure of Mrs. Knowles, and by the guest of honor, Geraldine, overcome by irrefragable curiosity, rose in her place, and looked eagerly toward her.

Miss Bond was a small woman, dressed so astonishingly that every eye in the room was instantly riveted upon her. She wore an enormous circular coat of shining red Russian-gold silk, glittering like enamel, lavishly edged with white fur, and fastened with clinking gold-and-enamel chains. But from this she slipped almost immediately, revealing a slim, exquisitely corseted and supple young figure, clad in a mysteriously tinted garment of gauzy silks, whose dull mauve and pearl and pink and salmon tintsung straight from her shoulders, and were carefully belted by a band of brilliants. From the sheer folds about her slender young throat rose a dark, sleek little head, with the black hair drawn from a white forehead, with almost Oriental severity. Her skin was fresh and soft and pure in coloring, her eyes black and bright, and in the delicately marked eyebrows and on the scarlet lips was just a hint of artifice that seemed to harmonize with her startling beauty. In the tips of the ears that the oddly arranged dark hair revealed were dangling ornaments of pearl and filigree, and the stockings and slippers that the drifting film of her brief gown exposed were of gold.

She took the group gathered around her instantly by storm. It was all said with such a gay rush, and it was accompanied with so infectious a gurgle of laughter, and with so many appealing and mischievous glances, that he could not stop listening to her, nor could anybody else.

"He hasn't asked me to marry him yet," said Kennedy Bond, "but I can see from the look in his eye that he means to, this very afternoon."

Louis laughed his full, free laugh, and all the others laughed, too.

"He might do very much worse!" said the little old lady, patting the girl's hand with her own tiny, veined hand.

"Now, I thank you," Miss Bond assured her. "I think that is most sweet and dear and good of you! But introduce me to all these nice people, my aunt's been telling me about them, and I'm going to try to get all the names straight!"

The Man Who Banished Corns

Blue-jay was invented by a scientist of distinction. By a man whose lifetime has been spent in the study of surgical dressings.

This is a master's method—correct, complete and efficient. And the millions of people who know it, never think of enduring a corn.

All in One

The first step is to stop the pain. This is done by removing all pressure—by the soft protecting ring marked A.

The next step is to gently cause the corn to disappear. This is done by the remarkable B & B Wax, which no corn can resist.

This bit of wax—marked B—is centered on the corn. It cannot spread. So, unlike old-time methods, it acts on the corn alone.

C is rubber-coated adhesive. This snugly wraps the application, protecting everything.

You apply this Blue-jay in a jiffy. The corn pain stops at once. The wrapping is comfortable and you forget it. In two days you remove it and the corn can be lifted out. Only rare corns need a second application.

This is the scientific way, the easy, sure and right way to end corns. You will never return to any wrong method when you try a Blue-jay once. Try it tonight.

TALKING IT OVER

—With Lotna Moon—

Charmer, Housewife, or Chum

Most women start matrimony with the determination to be all three. Many end matrimony because they have failed to make a success of any one of the three. A few women are so blessed, that they are capable of playing all three roles successfully to the end of the drama, but they are rare.

The dimpled young bride grasps the two roles that come easiest, the role of charmer, which she has been rehearsing all thru the courtship, and the one of housewife which holds all the thrill of an adventure for her. Her success in the second role soon outruns her success in the first. Foolishly, and unthinkingly she makes no attempt to learn the lines of the third role, which is more beauty (in his own wife) cannot continue to charm a man. The most beautiful woman in the world has no advantage over a plain woman after a year or two of marriage. In the eyes of a husband who loves her, a woman is beautiful, no matter how plain the world may think she is. The shape of her nose can add or detract nothing from her charm in his eyes.

The role of chum is really the leading role in the matrimonial drama, and the one that carries the line of the third role. The wife who runs the house without a wheel being heard to creak, and the wife who could look like a baby vamp to the end of the chapter, each get their round of applause; but it is the wife who could discuss her husband's golf score with intelligence, the wife who never threw his foot-saw in the garbage, the wife who listened when he read the sports news, and who knew where she had been cloven when he explained a deal he had just put through. SHE is the one who gets the "curtain calls"—the wife who was his CHUM.
