The "Lazy" Zulu

THE Zulu, one of the finest members of the Bantu race, inhabiting Zululand, a territory lying to the north of Natal in South Africa, provides much food for thought and reason for questioning. He is to be met with outside his own country, especially in Natal, where his intercourse with the whites is frequent and fairly intimate. He still preserves many of his tribal traditions and is but very briefly removed from his able and warlike progenitors who made the life of the early settlers no easy one. Brave, fearless, intelligent, and of beautiful physique, they were no mean defenders of their land.

To-day they far outnumber the white section, and living side by side with them, offer the student of human life in all its phases, a wonderful series of antitheses in eugenics, economics, ethics, religion, and philosophy of life. It is crime of no small magnitude for the "superior" white to pass hurried sentence upon and judgment of banishment against Bantu standards of living and to condemn as false his philosophy of life. His standard of living, as might be expected, is "lower" than that of the whites. His food is very largely farinaceous; corn meal predominates; little meat is consumed save on special occasions. His hut is simple and well adapted to the climate, and his clothing likewise. In spite of this, it is certainly begging the question to use the accepted term of "lower" without comment.

It is true that his life is far, far simpler, for his needs are immeasurably less and his days are filled with a spontaneous happiness and zest of life seldom seen elsewhere. His fund of sheer life-joy is unapproached by the ruling race. His code of ethics was for long a high one. Before he was introduced to trial by jury and the technical plea of "not guilty," he would nearly always admit a crime when taxed with it. Until his contact with the whites became more intimate, his morals, in the narrow sense of the word, were good. Even now he shows a readiness to "play the game" that is refreshing. Of religion there is no need to speak here.

His philosophy of life is one begotten by the sun and open air, nurtured by a genial, generous climate. His economics are largely the result of his philosophy—most distinctly, his philosophy of life is not dictated by economics—this in itself is noteworthy. They were a race of happy children, but civilization is showing its influence.

The Zulu has often been termed lazy, and various expedients have been tried to induce him to work. The most successful influence has been to create a demand for modern "necessities" and "luxuries." The result has not been happy. To obtain these new toys he has had to leave his kraal and migrate to the industrial centres, such as Johannesburg, Kimberley, and Durban, where he must live a life utterly alien to him; must conform to rules, seemingly arbitrary; must learn to esteem as priceless things of no worth. It is pathetic to see a fine Zulu man rigged in a reach-me-down suit, polished shoes, smart hat, and even carrying a cane. To see a woman adopting a corresponding attire is tragic, more so when their fine natural bearing and physique are remembered.

A modern and fairly well developed system of education is contributing to the complete upheaval of native ideas. Most of the work done by the Government and by the many societies is admirable, but it often seems that the white is far too prone to take for granted that his life philosophy is the only one, and with this as a postulate to introduce the thousand and one corollaries of thought, manner, custom, dress, food, and pleasures.

It is freely admitted that it is impossible to segregate any section of the world's population or for any to preserve uninfluenced its own life and thought, but nevertheless we allow little self-determination in the individual mental sphere, nay, rather so arrogant are we that we make any influence upward impossible.

From the Zulu standpoint, we daily force for ourselves fresh chains; we gather in congested areas and then demand rapid means of getting in and out; we adopt a type of education to conform to our ideal of a "full" life and thus produce abnormal hypersensitive mental states; we fill our houses and lives with non-essentials; from his point of view and by him so little needed that he has to be goaded into desiring them. We ask him to barter his natural freedom and lightness of spirit with its gloriously happy laugh for social conventions and amenities useless to him. He seldom stays continuously at his work for more than six months. He returns to his kraal as though to breathe for a while; again he is called lazy.

The pedantic theologian who in early days debated the standing room for angels on a needle's point took themselves seriously; we smile today. What will be the verdict of 400 years hence on our feverish activities and the lazy Zulu?

Meanwhile he is nationally unhappy. It is too late for us to cease studying the native as an interesting survival of early untutored humanity and to study ourselves from his standpoint? Such study would profoundly influence our methods of handling the "lower" races throughout the world, and possibly recall to our midst the laugh of the kraal.—The Christian Science Monitor.

JOE WEBER FISHING.

Famous Comedian Enjoyed Himself at Alexandria Bay. Joe Weber, world famous comedian, of Weber & Fields, has been having a great time among the islands. With a party of ten, including Mrs. Weber and Sam Bernard, he arrived on July 5th and since that time he has been hauling out big catches of bass from the waters of the St. Lawrence.

Sport, the unique sidewheeler, the property of Mrs. E. P. Wilbur, of South Bathwick, Pa., which for years has been one of the most picturesque of the private yachts, is a common sight, plowing the waters in the neighborhood of the Bay. The Nokomis, owned by Edson Bradley, of New York, is now the Wahloke. The Venetian, owned by Thomas Thurston, of Alexandria Bay; the Winona, owned by General Johnson, of Washington; the Jean, the property of T. A. Gillespie; the Charolette, of Thousand Island Park; the Neilred, the property of Frederick Frazier, of Syracuse; the Empress, owned by J. H. Wheeler, of New York; and the Corinthian, owned by Frederick Dundie, of Oswego, are among the steam-yachts which are in service.

Capt. and Mrs. Wilbur Vincent, Clayton, N.Y., will celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage on August 14th. Mr. and Mrs. Vincent both enjoy fairly good health and spirits.

Most of the large summer homes are open this year. The Holland cottage of the Rafferty family, which sits on the high land just below the Crossman house, Alexandria Bay, is occupied this season for the first time in four or five years. The Rafferty family are staying at their other home, directly across from the hotel. George C. Boldt, Jr., is at the Birches, the family summer home, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Graham Miles are at the farm house.

GIGANTIC DIRIGIBLE

New British Ship Equipped With Six Airplanes.

Washington, July 16.—Word has reached the air experts of the American Government, that the British Government has begun the construction of the largest dirigible that has yet been undertaken in the world, one that will carry an equipment of six airplanes for its own protection against heavier than aircraft.

This dirigible and the two hangars to be built for it will cost $9,000,000, according to the information reaching military men here. It will have a capacity of 10,000,000 cubic feet, will be 1,100 feet long, 137 feet in diameter and capable of lifting 100 tons, which would be more than double the lifting capacity of the R-34, which has just made a round trip voyage across the Atlantic. The cruising radius of the new dirigible, which will be finished in from eighteen to twenty months is given as 25,000 miles, and it could, it is claimed, easily undertake the voyage from England to Australia.

Boycotting St. Catharines Bakers. St. Catharines.—The bakers strike took on a new phase yesterday when the Master Bakers and members of their families took their bread to the grocery stores. They were met with the answer, "No bread wanted to-day," and they were obliged to take their bread back to the barn. Shipments of bread from outside cities were brought in for the local grocers who, with the exception of four, signed an agreement to accept no bread from local bakers while the strike is on.

The New York Stock Exchange has decided to close all day Saturday next in order to permit brokers to catch up with the heavy business of the last few weeks.
