THE ARCHBISHOP EXAMINED

HE GAVE HIS ONLY SOURCE OF REVENUE.

It Came From the Priests of the Diocese Who Collected It—He Did Not Own a Foot of Land—He Maintained His Household From the Cathedralium.

The examination of Archbishop Spratt for discovery in the Sister Basil case was in camera in the office of the clerk of the court at the Court House on Wednesday afternoon. The enquiry was to ascertain if His Grace possessed personal property with which to satisfy the judgment of the courts for $20,000 awarded to Sister Basil for attempted abduction. The archbishop at the beginning said inability prevented him from paying the judgment. He had barely enough money to live properly. His bank account in the Royal Bank showed less than $300 to his credit. In the Bank of Montreal he had $1,372, part of the late Father Duffus' estate. He had had $3,000 in one bank, but it went into the Freeman, a newspaper, newspaper. He was asked if he had money invested in stocks; he said he had $100 in the Capital Trust of Ottawa. The two bank accounts mentioned made up his total assets outside of what he had in his pocket, which amounted to $170. He had received $1,600 from another estate, but this he had given to Regiopolis College.

The enquiry lasted about an hour and a half. A. B. Cunningham acted for Sister Basil and T. J. Rigney for the archbishop.

His grace in the prolonged examination detailed the sums checked out from his personal account, considerable going to the Freeman to meet shortages, which he had pledged when it was taken over by the priests of the diocese. All his contributions were gifts. He considered it quite proper to give these amounts in the face of the judgment against him. He said he did not possess a foot of land and he knew of no money owing to him. The archbishop told of the receipts of the cathedralium, a title as it were, which become his property when paid into his hands by the priests who collected it. It amounted to about a tenth of certain revenues. It is all he has to live on. It was paid from time to time and in 1918 amounted to about $4,900. The stipes came in from time to time, but the only record he had was on a piece of paper; no books were kept in regard to the cathedralium.

His grace said they had accounts for Regiopolis College and the Episcopal Corporation were in his name; he was the Episcopal Corporation. "There was no doubt about that." The archbishop's secretary kept the books of the Corporation, and the collections were entered by him. His only source of income was from the cathedralium. He contributed to the household and other expenses of his residence.

Mr. Rigney concluded with this cross-examination:

Q.—"This cathedralium we have heard about, is it collectible in any manner by you?"

A.—"Not forcibly."

Q.—"What do you mean by that?"

A.—"I cannot press it."

Q.—"I used the word 'collected.' Can it be collected by you?"

A.—"Not by law not legally."

This concluded the archbishop's examination.

Giving Back the Eiffel Tower.

The Eiffel Tower of Paris has played quite an important role in the history of the war, and in spite of the fact that, a few years ago, the end of its career as a structure was believed to be impending. Erected in 1889 for the exhibition of 1889, there was a prevalent belief that after 15 or 20 years the condition of the steel would necessitate the demolition of the tower; but fortunately the evil day for the "highest building on earth" was put off. At the beginning of the war, the Eiffel Tower was taken over by the military authorities as an anti-aircraft observation post, as well as a wireless station. To the lonely watcher at the top of the tower was assigned the responsibility of giving warning of the approach of Zeppelins and Gothas. To-day Parisians are rejoicing over the return of their beloved tower back to normal uses. Early in May it was thrown open to the public, who once more ascended to its pinnacles for the sake of its unique panoramas and the novelty of sending off the familiar postcard from the top of the tower. In the meantime, the various military services which had their quarters round the base are removing to some other camping ground.

Birds, Animals and Fish Show Knowledge of Weather.

Anyone who has been brought much into contact with animals knows how sensitive they are to approaching changes in the weather, says Spare Moments. Nature seems to have provided them with a prophetic instinct in this respect, partly, no doubt, because to so many of them the weather is of such great importance.

The nests of many birds would be utterly ruined if its tenants were away during a storm and, so, warned by instinct, they never fail to return home in time.

When a storm is approaching the robins sit whistling on the top branches of trees; if swallows touch the water as they fly it is a sure sign of rain, and so it is if the sparrows chirp a great deal.

When seagulls fly out to sea early in the morning the day will be fine, and the wind moderate; but when the gulls hang over the land and fly inshore the fisher-folk know that they must expect severe winds, and probably stormy weather.

Fish, too, are very weatherwise. Cod will actually take in ballast before a storm. Some time ago, a number of cod were caught off the shores of Newfoundland twelve hours before a severe gale, and it was found that all of them had swallowed a number of stones, some of which weighed three or four ounces.

Sea urchins always try to wiggle under the mud, or at least to cover themselves with sand before a storm; while dolphins never sport or toss about in a rough sea until a change for the better is at hand. All sailors know that a tempest is impending when numbers of the stormy petrel flock in the wake of the vessel.

In Scotland the country people believe that it will be a fine day if the raven cries before the rook in the morning, but quite the reverse if the rook makes himself first heard.

If a horse is lively without apparent cause, it is a sure sign of cold weather in the near future, but if it stretches out its neck and sniffs the air, the observer should turn back and fetch his umbrella, for he will certainly need it before the evening.

If a cat sneezes or sits with her back to the fire it will rain. If she washes her face during a frost it will soon thaw, and if she scratches the wall or the leg of the table vigorously the wind will be very high.

"Hark! I hear the ass's bray."

"We shall have some rain to-day."

Alexandre Millerand.

Many of the characteristics of Georges Clemenceau are said to enter into the "human equation" of Alexandre Millerand, the former Minister of War whom the French Government has put at the head of affairs in Alsace and Lorraine. Like Clemenceau he is a man of combined newspaper and political experience, with quite strong convictions as to the first duty of a war minister being to prepare for war. A promise made by his predecessor to restore Col. Paty du Clam to the army, and kept by Millerand, because he held himself compelled to respect it whatever might be the popular disapproval, led to his resignation from the War Ministry, to which he returned after Germany had begun her invasion. To his new position in Alsace-Lorraine, Millerand takes also the experience of a man who has served France as Minister of Commerce and Minister of Public Works, and a restored friendship with Clemenceau himself. The two were old friends who had become antagonized, and the attempt to assassinate Clemenceau happily reconciled them.

HER LITTLE GIRL HAD DYSENTERY

Bowels Moved as Many as 25 Times a Day.

Dysentery manifests itself with varying degrees of intensity, but in well marked cases the attack is commonly preceded by some amount of diarrhoea, which gradually increases in severity, and is accompanied with gripping pains in the abdomen. The discharges from the bowels succeed each other with great frequency, and the matter passed from the bowels, which at first resemble those of ordinary diarrhoea, soon change their character, becoming scanty, mucous or slimy, and subsequently mixed with, or consisting wholly of blood. Never neglect what at first appears to be a slight attack of diarrhoea or dysentery may set in. Cure the first symptoms by the use of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mrs. Jno. V. Tanton, R. R. No. 5, Watford, Ont., writes:—"My daughter was taken down, two years ago, with dysentery, and I could find no help for her until I got a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. She was only two years old, and ate something different to what she was used to. She had as many as twenty-five movements a day, and mostly blood. We had the doctor several times, but no relief came until we used 'Dr. Fowler's.' I would not be without it in the house for a good bit."

Be sure and get "Dr. Fowler's" when you ask for it. Price, 35c a bottle; put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.
