Armies That Held the Line

IGURES compiled by the general staff of the army show that on November 11, 1918, the day of the armistice, the front measured 642 kilometers. Fifty-five per cent, of this front, or kilometers, was held and Stella, were Sunday visitors at 134.25 kilometers, was held by the American forces; 18 per cent. or 113 kilometers, was held by the British Clark Slack and children, Tilley, forces, and 6 per cent., or 40 kilometers, was held by the Belgian army.

On January 31, 1918, the front measured 754 kilometers. Then came the Hindenburg drive of March, which increased the length of the western front until July 20, 1918, when it measured 856 kilonieters. This was the maximum length of the front, and it was just then that the effects of the great Allied joint drive began to show. By September the front had been shortened to 722 kilometers, and by November 11 to 642

The British held 25 per cent. of the front on January 1, or 187 kilometers, and held this length of front until March 21, when the Hindenburg drive opened. The British front, according to the figures, was at no time more than 180 kilometers after March 21. The French held 69 per cent, of the front on January 1 and only 55 per cent. on November 11. The maximum per centage of the front held by the French was on May 30, when they held 632.5 kilometers, or 75 per cent. of the front.

The American army held 1 per cent. on February 28, 4 per cent. on March 21, 6 per cent. on May 20, 12 per cent. on June 10, 14 per cent. on July 30, 17 per cent, on August 10, 20 per cent, on August 10, 20 per cent, on August 30, 22 per cent, on September 10, 23 per cent. on October 10, and fell back to 21 per cent. on November 11.

According to the official announcement, the kilometers of the front held by the armies of each of the allied nations on the main western front in 1918 were as follows on the dates named:-- will be noted that the United States army did not hold a large percentage of the front line until after the war had been practically won by the French and British victories during the months of July and August. In October and November, when it was evident to everybody that Germany was beaten, the Americans were holding a little over 20 per cent: of the line and delivering kicks to the giant frame of the exhausted enemy. There is no wish in Canada to take away from the credit due to Americans for their generous support of the allied cause during the last two years of the struggle, but it is a good thing to keep facts and figures like the above in sight these days to answer a certain element in the United States that claims all the glory of winning the war, as though France and Great Britain did not

The crab's equivalent to the internal bones of animals is its tough outer shell, which does not grow. The baby crab is forced to get rid of this tough confining prison. So it breaks itself loose internally and then splits its old protecting home across the extreme back ridge, creeping out in that way. It is, naturally, a very delicate operation to withdraw the terrible claws and other limbs, as these are bigger at the extreme end. Indeed, it seems at first sight impossible, but these curious creatures have the power of withdrawing the blood into the body, and this greatly reduces the bulk of the appendages. When Mr. Crab, has thus escaped from his old shell, he is quite soft and forms a dainty meal for his enemies; his pincers, too, are useless. So while his new outer thell

To overcome this difficulty he swells himself out by absorbing as much water as possible, and re-mains in this artificially distended condition till the new shell hardens; then he at once gets rid of the useful water and leaves himself plenty of room for growth.

On the bait being replaced, the fish did exactly the same thing, and so carefully avoided "capture." Experiments with other fish always had the same

The following humorous anecdote amply proves that fish-or, at any rate, trout-have memories:

An expert pisciculturist kept a large trout captive in a pool. Whenever anyone approached the hatchery this trout would show itself, and appear to be examining its visitors. By way of experiment the expert would get a trout rod and hold it at the side of the pool. Immediately the trout would swim swiftly into hiding, its fins bristling, its skin pale with fear, and its eyes glaring. It would remain hidden as long as the trout rod was in evidence.

The explanation of this trout's fear of the rod is that early in its life the expert cast a new barbless hook into the pool with a trout rod in order to test it. The trout seized the hook, which penetrated its upper jaw. By the time it had been released, the fear and pain it had suffered evidently had made a lasting impression upon its memory. An astonishing fact is that when the owner of the trout brought an ordinary stick or cane into view the fish would take no notice whatever! Fish make love to the partners of their choice practically in the same way that pigeons coo and bow to
