The Luck of Geraldine Laird

BY KATHLEEN NORRIS,

Author of "The Story of Julia Page," "Heart of Rachel," "Josselyn's Wife," "Sisters," etc.

"I realize perfectly that you have a well, a good deal of temperament, Dean," Geraldine said, in a troubled tone, "and I know that when you and Louis get together you talk about writing and New York and success—I suppose we all have those dreams! But you have so much, Dean, in having your home, and your wife and children, and your health—"

She hesitated, a trifle daunted by his expression. Then she got up, and after exchanging a few meaningless remarks entirely for the benefit of the outside office force, she went away. But as Geraldine went out into the street again, she felt absolutely dazed with pain.

She walked slowly for a square or two, and then, with a sudden look of resolution in her eyes, boarded a trolley-car, and went out to the newly-opened and attractive residence site that was known as Hyde Park Wood. Dean had always expressed an admiration for Hyde Park Wood, but any vague plan he had of living there, Geraldine had contended, to combat that it was too far from her mother.

To-day she walked slowly through it, looking at the pretty brick-and-stucco houses, and the occasional charming Colonial model, with suddenly awakened interest. All the little homes were inviting, with their newly-planted gardens, their fresh white paint, and their setting of great elms and maples just feathering into a new green. Geraldine stopped before a delightful modern farmhouse, cream-white with demure green blinds, barely finished, odorless of clean white wood, and flooded with pure sunshine.

She studied it carefully, and then picked her way daintily toward the coated and hatted man who was directing some bare-armed laborers on another house nearby.

"Is this house for sale?"
 "Yes, ma'am."
 "If I bring my husband here on Sunday, might we see it?"
 "Sure you can," the contractor said amiably.

Dean had brought her to see these houses six months ago, and had expatiated eagerly upon the advantage to the children and their setting of great elms and maples just feathering into a new green. Geraldine remembered that she had been for some forgotten reason, notably unenthusiastic.

They had some little capital, quite enough for this venture anyway. Geraldine imagined a conversation between her husband and herself in which Dean would suggest that they mortgage the house, to begin with, and she would persuade him that the better way was to start clear of debt, and add the furniture piece by piece, as they could afford it.

She reached home pleasantly excited and full of hope, amusing the little girls, as she brushed their thick mops and buttoned clean aprons for supper, with an account of the pretty houses in Hyde Park Wood, and the nice little girls who were playing about in the neighborhood. Mrs. Fitzpatrick wandered into the room while they laughed and splashed and chattered together.

"The girls were wondering if you would do some imitations, some night at the Bazaar, Jerry," she presently observed. "They've got a program to get up, entirely different, the five nights," her mother explained. "I suppose somebody remembered you, and got Aunt Lizzie to ask me." She did not push the point.

"I'm sure I don't know who I could do," Geraldine, anxious not to seem disobliging, resumed presently.

"There's always Maude Adams and Ethel Barrymore," her mother suggested.

"Oh but Mother, every one must be sick of those—I've done them for years!" the younger woman protested. "I do 'Fog of My Heart' pretty well," she admitted dubiously.

"Why don't you offer just to fill in if they need you, Jerry?" Mrs. Fitzpatrick asked eagerly.

But Geraldine's face suddenly darkened, as the heavy question of Dean and Dean's happiness arose again in her mind.

TALKING IT OVER

—With Lorna Moor—

Being Married to a Genius

"When I DO marry, IF I ever do," said the Pretty College Girl emphatically, "I shall marry a man of genius, no ordinary humdrum man for me!"

"Well," sighed Mahogany Top, taking another bite at a goodie chocolate, "just so long as he has oodles and oodles of money it will be all right for me."

"I want a man with a Dana Gibson chin," said Golden Braids, "and he can be as poor, as poor, but he must love me till it hurts; and he must think that every other girl is as plain as the wrong side of a hedge fence, but he must think that I am wonderful, and beautiful and good."

"Frosy thing," retorted the Pretty College Girl, "I want to live with a man who does the big things in life, a man whom the whole world admires; money is nothing, and a Dana Gibson chin is nothing, compared with having the devotion of a super man."

Of course, the pretty college girl isn't at all likely to meet a genius, and she is very likely to marry that long-legged very ordinary, but perfectly nice boy, who is in his sophomore year; which is a very fortunate thing for her. There isn't any such thing as "the devotion of a super man"; if a super man took time to be devoted to a woman he wouldn't be a super man. I have a friend who is married to a genius; she is just a busy grey curtain, a sort of neutral background against which his brilliancy looms up. He is devoted, but it is to himself; he is selfish, self-centered, and egotistic. If he were not, he would not be a genius. His wife is starved for companionship, he gives her none, but he demands her constant attention; she is a glorified valet-secretary-nurse-housekeeper and shock absorber; a buffer between him and the things he doesn't want to face. She bears the brunt when the critics rip him to bits, and she has to watch him preen himself when they throw him bouquets. "A genius ought to marry a squaw," she said in exasperation one day; "a white woman is wasted upon him!"

BENSON'S Corn Starch

Desserts—Rolls Sauces

BENSON'S is pure prepared corn starch, delicate and nourishing, unexcelled for all cooking purposes.

It improves the texture of bread, biscuits and rolls if one-third of the flour is substituted with Benson's Corn Starch. It makes pie crusts light and flakey.

There is a recipe for the most delicious Blanc Mange on the package, together with a dozen other uses. Benson's is the best Corn Starch for making sauces and gravies smooth and creamy.

LEMON PIE

(Enough for one medium sized pie)

1/2 cup sugar, 6 tablespoons Benson's Corn Starch, 1/2 cup boiling water, juice and rind of two lemons, 2 egg yolks, 2 egg whites, 2 tablespoons powdered sugar.

Mix corn starch, sugar, lemon juice, grated rind and beaten egg yolks. Add boiling water slowly, stirring constantly. Cook until thick and boiling. Cool, fill a baked pie shell and cover with a meringue made of the stiffly beaten egg whites, and powdered sugar. Brown meringue in a slow oven.

Pie Crust

2 cups flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1 teaspoon salt, 1/2 cup shortening, 1/2 cup ice water.
