Cocoon Oil Fine
For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Don't use prepared shampoos of anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain purified cocoon oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless) is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get purified cocoon oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

INFLAMED GUMS—
A CAUSE OF LOOSE TEETH

Pyorrhea is undoubtedly a vital danger to both gums and teeth. Tender gums indicate it, and with it come loosening teeth. Imperceptibly, at first, the gums recede from the normal gum line. They inflame. They prevent many tiny openings for millions of bacteria to attack the unnameable tooth base. Tooth-base decay quickly follows. Even if the cavity be filled and the tooth saved, the gums continue to recede. Remember, too, that inflamed and bleeding gums act as so many doorways for disease germs to enter the system—infecting joints or tonsils—or causing other ailments.

Against this Pyorrhea (Riggs' Disease) ordinary tooth-pastes are powerless. Yet Pyorrhea attacks four out of five people who never over forty, and many under this age. But Forhan's—used in time and used consistently—positively prevents Pyorrhea. It is a scientific tooth cleanser of soft brush your teeth with it. See how promptly bleeding or gum tenderness ceases and how your teeth are kept white and clean.

If gum-irritation has already set in, start using Forhan's and consult a dentist immediately for special treatment.

DRESSES
BY ANNE RITTENHOUSE

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

There is a Tendency On the Part of Designers and Individual Women in Paris to Use the Costume of the Visiting Arabs for Inspiration.

The enthusiasm of the crowd that was so generously thrown to the Arabs of the Allied armies who took part in the Victory parade was caught up by the designers and reflected in certain kinds of coat, and head dresses. It is a wonder that more was not done in this line when the suggestion for individual treatment of drapery was so strong.

The Arabs themselves seemed utterly unconscious of their impression on the public. In the parade they were the most picturesque segment with their flowing draperies, curious uniforms snow white ponies with clipped manes and tails. When they walk on the streets or sit in front of the cafes smoking and drinking, they are more curiously regarded than the soldiers of any other nation, and Paris is quite familiar with a vast assemblage of human curiosities. She is not easily started, but she is always vivaciously curious.

The matter which was brought on by the look, the powerful men who stalk the street like moving statues. Paris likes their old, old skirts and especially the exquisite thin, embroidered "burnous," which shows through its transparency, the colorful garments beneath.

The head dress also is a bit of moving loveliness in the densely packed streets; its foundation is a wide band of gold or red cloth with a flowing white veil that drops backward over the shoulders, made of any thin white material. Often these Arabs wear two and three costumes at once, probably to withstand the chill days of this summer. The American women have worn their winter clothes, including heavy furs, so it is no wonder that these men from hot climates simply emptied their knapsacks and word layer after layer of garments.

The inspiration that came from these Arabs resulted in tight head bands rather broad and wide, that serve as the foundation for street hats, and to the bands are attached veils of crepe de chine, gauze, or even subdued metallic tulle. Of course, the dress-makers took up the bournous and created it in serviceable garments that would serve for the autumn, but Paris has worn so many of these loose Arabian capes for six months that the burnous is not a compelling novelty.

Paul Poiret is the one dressmaker that launches his seasonal output on the basis of the Moroccan inspiration but he made up his mind to use the costumes of this country for his autumn openings long before the Victory parade took place. He adapts the skirt of the Arab with its trousered effect and the long tunic over the bright colored skirt. It is quite true that no one but an Arab would like to dress like an Arab. The woman of today uses all her ingenuity to discard clothes without shocking.

Some hostesses have the towels for different guestrooms and bathrooms distinguished by a little color. Bath towels, wash cloths and bath mats are banded with blue, violet, rose or yellow, according to their destination. And the same color is introduced lightly into the embroidery of the hand towels.

The huge English bath towels, which can be worn instead of a bath robe, cost $8 or $10 a pair, but one of them is doubtless a luxurious addition to the equipment of any bathroom.

It is usual, of course, for the fastidious guest to supply herself with her favorite toilet articles. Nevertheless, it is the privilege of the hostess to keep the guestrooms stocked with such things as a guest might possibly need. So small cakes of soap, a fresh one for each guest—the odds and ends that remain can be made into soap jelly for shampooing—should always appear in the guest's bath room. There should also be a tube of tooth paste, a bottle of powder or wash, a box of talcum powder, a simple toilet water, a bottle of witch-hazel—all plainly marked—some sort of antiseptic wash, like peroxide of hydrogen, face powder, and powder puffs—nobody nowadays thinks of offering her guest a puff that has been used before, in a basket. The ribbon trimmings match the color scheme of the room. The basket is filled with tiny antiseptic puffs of absorbent cotton. There are also sterilized lamb's wool puffs. The woman who does not wish to go to much expense in the equipment of the guestroom dressing table can make tiny puffs by tying bits of absorbent cotton with a little ribbon, to form a handle.

When there are the gauze bags made on bags, which also contain individual powder puffs.

A clock of some sort is essential in the guestroom. It should be a quiet sort of little clock, for loud ticking disturbs the rest of the house. One of the clocks that has a luminous face in the dark is admirable for the guestroom, for the watchful hours in the night can thereby be told.

A novelty is a luminous ball at the end of a chain on the electric light bulb. This ball, always visible in the dark, immediately shows one the location of the electric light bulb and saves much confusion in a strange room, in a bathroom or in a hall.

Paper slippers can now be bought for very small price, and a few pairs of these kept on hand will often prove useful in the emergency when slippers have been forgotten or when the guest has been persuaded to stay unexpectedly.

A knocker at the guestroom door is convenient and nowadays when knockers are so attractive one wishes one at every door. Those of pottery, in the shape of bunches of flowers or a peach, apple or pear on a nest of leaves, are something of a novelty, and the more usual ones of brass are always attractive.

TO REVIVE CROCHET STITCH

Handsome New Sweaters Are Being Produced by the Needles Which Have Been Dormant.

Many of the new sweaters are crocheted. There has been an interval when the crochet stitch has been decidedly in abeyance and we were not content unless we could handle knitting needles as well as the crochet hook. But there are some charming sweaters offered in the smart shops that are done in crochet stitch, and so it is a safe venture to predict that before very long we will see the crochet hook again in evidence.

The dolman is the garment you will want to buy if you are looking for general utility spring and summer. In black satin or tricotine or in taupe they are excellent, but for the woman who is not afraid of a little color now and then a better selection could not be made than to buy one of these dolmans in bright rose color, brilliant drabish blue, Italian green or deep violet.

The latest color is onion. Now, what in your opinion would onion color be? Would it be the light green that you see in the delicate tops of spring onions or the purple that shows in the wrappings of a large Bermuda onion, or a sort of oyster color, or a bluish white? Well, in reality it is the color of the dry brownish skin of the onion—a sort of subdued henna.

There are combs to be worn in the evening that hold a whirl of split ostrich that forms a halo over the top of the head for a sweep of eight or nine inches. These combs are worn with ostrich fans to match.

SOME QUAIN TABLE SCREENS

Mahogany Frame Designed to be Packed and Carried When One Is Traveling About.

There is always something new, or it may be, something old in a guise that adds novelty to its other attractions. A case in point is one of the dear, little table screens, reproductions of an antique original which have lately been scoring a great success. Standing about fifteen inches high, the screen consists of a mahogany frame that lifts out of a neat turned foot, so that the whole thing can be packed up into a small compass for traveling. Within the frame is mounted a beautifully wrought needlework picture. Whether the subject be a study of some gracious early Victorian figure or an old-world garden scene, rendered with a delicacy and truth to nature, it makes the little picture a never-failing source of pleasure.

And, apropos of the garden pictures, there is another to be seen which is a veritable work of art, often the actual presentation of some particular garden, whose owner had selected this medium of keeping a remembrance of its beauty. Allied to this style of embroidery are the motto pictures, embodying some favorite or consolatory motto or verse with specially chosen landscape or flower devices.

SOME NEW PARIS NOVELTIES

Chain of Beads of Blue and Black Crochet—Hand-Knitted White Wool Gaiters.

Among the attractive chain novelties shown in Paris was one which reached far below the waist, made of large beads of bright blue and black crochet, from which was suspended a novelty cross in the two colors, says Women's Wear.

Something rather chic in gaiters was noted recently on a smartly dressed girl, whose short skirts gave one a good view of a hand-knitted white wool gaiter, which pulled on over her shoe and had the usual gaiter shape, with the strap under the shoe. They fitted the ankle snugly and were very smart. Women in America might confine them to motoring or to sport wear, although there is no reason for so doing. Hand-knitters will be interested to know that they were knitted with the knit one row and purl back method.
