HAVANA RED SOX WINNERS

DEFEATED ATHLETICS ON SATURDAY BY 8 TO 2.

Big Crowd Witnessed a Rather Listless Game—Athletics Should Have Won the Game.

The Havana Red Sox were in our midst again Saturday afternoon, and at the ball yard, took the big end of a 3-2 score with the Athletics. There was a good crowd of "the faithful" out to see the fracas, which was not worth while writing home about. It was a listless game, with nothing at stake, and, for the most part, was about as tame as a pink tea, but with just a little more "pep" the Athletics would have captured the match easily. "Pop" Watkins, the veteran manager of the colored team, who has been in the game for thirty years, and who will remain until he is counted out, and that will be some time yet, as he is still as lively as a young cricket, was on deck, and, as per usual, brightened up the proceedings with his timely talk to his string of players from the bench when everything did not go the way to suit him. "Pop" fights all through the piece to get the very best he can out of his squad, although he declared to the fans who tried to "kid" him that he never had anything to grumble about. During the set-to, the visiting team rendered one song, entitled, "The Spot Where I Was Born," with variations, and it took well with the crowd.

There was no encore, however, the players deciding to cut out the song and use their voice for the good of the game, and while the frame was on, kept up a steady flow of talk. The team introduced what they called "motorcycle" but after the first innings their gasoline ran out.

The Red Sox gathered in two runs in the first innings, and another in the fifth, and this was sufficient to give them the game. For six innings the home boys failed to get a man around the circuit, but the "lucky seventh" came around, and the Kingston game put over two, and it did look as if they would turn the tables on "Pop" Watkins' hired help, but there was nothing more doing in the other two stanzas. In the seventh "Sammy" Hall got a celebrated "punch," and after Spencer had got started both he and Hall crossed the home plate with the only two runs gathered by our own boys. Several other times the Athletics got men on bases, but they died there. Athletics should have won the game.

The Red Sox got Derry for a total of twelve hits, but they were well scattered. The local team chalked up six hits off Walters. Derry was credited with striking out three men, and Walters seven. Hall's miff of Barney's fly in the first innings was expensive. The Athletics had three men on bases in the third and everything looked rosy for some runs, but no chance. Hall made a dandy catch in the seventh. The Athletics worked in two or three double plays that were worth while seeing. In order to give the veteran snipers, George Sullivan, a rest, Joe Daley donned the gas mask and watched the slants back of the catcher, while "Sully" got out in the garden, and kept an eye on the bases. The score:

Much English Racing Next Year. The flat racing fixtures in England and Scotland sanctioned by the Jockey Club for next year number 133 fixtures, and cover the season from 22nd, to the close at Lingfield Park, Nov. 27th. These are in addition to the Irish meetings, which are under the jurisdiction of the Irish Turf Club, and apart also from the steeplechase meetings, which are under National Hunt rules and control. There is also a good deal of what is called unrecognized racing at scores of small meetings.

Cornwall Wants Minto Cup. Cornwall is preparing to challenge for the Minto Cup; in fact, the team, says W. C. Burns in a wire to D. E. Mackenzie, of the New Westminister Fair Association, are eager to come to grips with the Redskins, but first they have to catch the N.L.U. championship, a feat which unfortunately they have not yet performed.

You come pretty near being dishonest when you take an unwarranted advantage. Hope is the constant companion of the optimist.

ENGLISH CRITIC ON BOXING

AMERICAN REFEREES LAX AND IGNORE ROUGH TACTICS.

Corri! Has System—Courage Is the First Thing Required of a Ring Official.

Just what constitutes the proper qualifications and the proper procedure for a referee in the ring has often been the subject of controversy between English and American observers of the sport of boxing. Americans who have boxed in London, and their supporters have often criticized British officials as "unfair," and in the natural course of events the British have brought countercharges of inefficiency against American officials. In this connection there recently appeared in a British publication devoted to sports, a few words reflecting upon the qualities of the American referee.

"Courage is the first thing required of a referee," says the article in question. "Without it he can never be the conscience of the game, as the white-robed umpire has been for so many years in the cricket field. On the whole, British referees are more courageous than the American officials, and that why professional boxing has always been cleaner and more wholesome business with us than with our transatlantic rivals.

"American referees have always been too lenient to rough-house tactics, and also too ready to prefer the safety of the box office to those of boxing—they seldom disqualify a boxer for fear of offending the public which would thereby lose its money's worth. Indeed, their unwillingness to deal drastically with the brutal and unfair glove fighter is largely responsible for the hostile attitude of many State Governments.

The system which the referee in Great Britain employs in deciding the winner of a contest is explained by Eugent Corri considered the most capable referee in England. In a book he wrote, entitled "Thirty Years a Referee," he gives the following account of his method:

System of Awarding Points. "My system of awarding points is to make five the highest possible for any one round. It often happens that the difference in the total of points scored by two men is very slight, and I have not infrequently declared a draw when this happens. For example if a champion was fractionally beaten by a challenger, I might decide, having regard to all that was at stake for the champion, to make the fight a draw until he should be more decisively defeated.

exclusive guidance, and in the case of a long, closely contested fight decisions are not so easily given as may seem to the uninitiated. It is not generally known that one of the National Sporting Club rules empowers the referee to give the verdict in favor of a man although he may be actually counted out. The National Sporting Club takes no official cognizance of the knockout, though, of course we are all aware that a knockout blow is deemed to be conclusive. Still suppose a case like this:

"One man has been winning handsomely all along the line to the 20th round in a specified 20-round contest. In the last round, let it be argued that the man who has figured so splendidly is suddenly knocked down by a chance blow and counted out. The rules of the National Sporting Club would, in such a case as that, justify a referee in giving the fight to the man who had so conspicuously proved his superiority on points."

Further views of what constitutes a competent referee in England may be gleaned from the following paragraphs:

Referee Born, Not Made. "The referee, like the poet, is born, not made. He has to have a good deal in common with the men whose work he is watching, whose conduct he is to a certain extent controlling. He must live in the game—and, for all that, never forget the truth expressed in Mr. Kipling's line, "The game is greater than the player of the game."

Ringside Crowds Unsportsmanlike. "The average ringside crowd, it must be admitted, knows very little about the game, and is most unsportsmanlike in moments of excitement. It is the old story—a crowd is invariably inferior in intelligence and morality to its average human component. Here and there, it is true, we find a ringside assemblage which knows almost as much about boxing as the crowd at Old Trafford knows about cricket.

In Wales, where boxing is as much a national pastime as Rugby football, it is surprising how quick the spectators are to appreciate the nuances of a contest between highly skilled performers. Yet in Wales—and even at the National Sporting Club, the headquarters of professional boxing in this country—there are always many critics present who are much too excited to keep the sportsmanlike rule of a lance during the rounds."

FOOTBALL SERIES ENDS

VOCATIONALS DEFEATED R.C.A. IN THE LAST GAME

The Score Was 2 to 0—The New League Will Start on Saturday Next.

The final game in the Military Football League was won on Saturday evening by Vocationals from R.C.A. by a score of 2 to 0. It was a splendid game. The R.C.A. players showed up well, and rained snots at the Vocationals' goal, only the most skillful preventing them from scoring. There was a good attendance, and the president of the new League, Major Hewitt, was present at the office. The line up was:

Vocationals	R.C.A.
Taylor	goal
Ludgate	backs
Strower	Whelan
McLeish	half backs
Foster	Hoggart
McArthur	Tingman
Watts	Glennach
Davis	McMahon
Thibbets	Rowe
Singleton	Smith
Guy	Harvey

Referee, J. McFarlane. This game finished the schedule, and the Vocational team goes out of existence. The league was a success in every way and gave a new impetus to football in the city. The enthusiasm of the players was never dampened, and, barring some minor incidents, that may be anticipated in all sports, nothing occurred to disrupt the esprit-de-corps that characterized the teams. The new Kingston and District League, there are five teams ready to begin the fall series which opens on Saturday next, A. and N., G. W. V. A., Shipbuilders, 21st and R.C.A. A committee will confer with Mayor H. W. Newman with the object of appearing on the programme on the occasion of the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. His Royal Highness will be in the city on Saturday Oct. 25th. He leaves the R.C.A. for Queen's University at 3 p.m. and it is hoped that it will be possible for him to visit the college to kick off the ball at an exhibition game, to be played between A and N and G.W.V.A. veterans. This arrangement will draw a throng of citizens to the cricket field to see the Prince who could not see him anywhere else.

Opportunity is generally on the lookout for the individual who has enough ambition and vim to get out and hustle.
