

THE COST OF PRODUCTION

RISES AS WAGES INCREASE AND HOURS DECREASE

The Question As To How Long Shall We Work Simmers Down To Production Per Hour.

Drill Chips. We'll admit John Smart Mill may have us shaded a bit when it comes to deep and profound discussions of economic questions.

"How long shall we work?" That query has been (and still is) a source of prolonged cussin' and discussion.

That query has been (and still is) a source of prolonged cussin' and discussion. We begin cussin' it with almost our first breath.

Fifty years ago we thought 12 hours was a regular day. Everybody, in those days, worked 12 hours, and everybody was happy.

But still the cry is for even shorter working days and believe me Eddy I'm for 'em—I'm for one hour days and 12 hour pay.

Let's suppose that you and your Boss are making some machine or other that sells for $10.00.

The Late George Brown.

George Brown's Ideal; Robert Jaffray's Ambition

THE Globe was founded for a cause—that cause was Responsible Government, the Abolition of Clergy Reserves, the overthrowing of the Family Compact.

This was George Brown's ideal. He fought for it by his personal service in public life as well as through The Globe, which he founded in 1844.

Robert Jaffray received his inspiration from George Brown, whose guide, counsellor and friend he was.

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true" declared Lincoln during the darkest hours of the Civil War.

Says the Orillia "Times": "The Globe is to-day in point of influence the foremost newspaper in Canada."

The Globe is a Great Family Newspaper

It is rich with honorable traditions, always true to the causes which brought it into existence.

Because to-morrow's Globe will be what it was to-day, what it was yesterday—because it will be what it has always been, it is worthy of a place in your home.

What The Globe Stands For

The Globe stands for Canada as a nation within the British Empire, entitled to share in the settlement of great Imperial issues—such as peace and war; for the arbitration of all disputes between nations; for the equality of all Canadian citizens—regardless of race or creed—before the law—for the right of women to vote in all elections and sit in Parliament; for the national ownership and operation of railways and telegraphs; for the development under Provincial or municipal control of all available water powers and the extension of public power lines wherever practicable to the farms as well as the cities and the towns—for the prohibition by Federal law of the importation, manufacture or retail sale in Canada of intoxicating liquor for a reform in the land laws and in the system of land taxation throughout the Dominion which shall encourage use and discourage speculation; for the strengthening and enforcement of the law against combinations in restraint of trade—for a tariff based on revenue requirements; for a more equitable division between Capital and Labor of the wealth produced by their co-operation in industry; for old-age pensions and the insurance of wage workers against unemployment and sickness; for the simplification of Court procedure and the lessening of appeals so that the poor shall not remain at a disadvantage; for an educational system in all the Provinces that shall promote citizenship by the abolition of illiteracy.—Stewart Lyon—Editor, The Globe, in the 75th Anniversary edition of The Globe.

THE Globe was founded for a cause—that cause was Responsible Government, the Abolition of Clergy Reserves, the overthrowing of the Family Compact. It fought for Ecclesiastical Reform, for Representation by Population, for Confederation. All through the bitter controversies of those early days, The Globe stood conscientiously to its task. It helped lead the country through many dangers and pitfalls to great nationhood.

This was George Brown's ideal. He fought for it by his personal service in public life as well as through The Globe, which he founded in 1844. He lived to see Canada emerge from the struggle a fully confederated Dominion, stepping on to the highway of great national progress and prosperity.

Robert Jaffray received his inspiration from George Brown, whose guide, counsellor and friend he was. The management of The Globe by Robert Jaffray, was characterized by an ambition to maintain the George Brown traditions, and The Globe's position as the Great Family Newspaper George Brown made it.

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true" declared Lincoln during the darkest hours of the Civil War. As an advocate of reform and an organ of public opinion, this has been The Globe's principle. Strict adherence to and the continuance of its traditions have realized the George Brown ideal, and fulfilled the Robert Jaffray ambition.

Says the Orillia "Times": "The Globe is to-day in point of influence the foremost newspaper in Canada, and has won for itself the proud place it occupies by sheer merit. Its remarkable strength was shown during the war, no other Canadian paper approaching the excellence and detail of its cable service. The Globe was founded as a defender and exponent of the rights of the common people, and so long as it remains true to its honorable traditions, it deserves to, and will succeed."

The Globe is a Great Family Newspaper

It is rich with honorable traditions, always true to the causes which brought it into existence, always the advocate of every good cause.

Because to-morrow's Globe will be what it was to-day, what it was yesterday—because it will be what it has always been, it is worthy of a place in your home.
