BRAVES MAKE DEMANDS

INTERESTING DISPUTE AMONG SIX NATION INDIANS.

Men Who Fought For Their Country During the War Are Opposed to the Indians' Council as Now Constituted and Claim a Voice in the Government of the Red Men on the Reserve Near Brantford.

WHILE the tomahawk has long since been buried, and no longer the braves go out-clad in buckskin and marked with feathers the fighting spirit of the Indian has not departed. Proof of this, it was necessary, was vouchsafed by the Indians throughout the Dominion during the past five years. In this the Six Nations, inhabiting the reserve near Brantford—what remains of the tract of land, six miles on each side of the Ouse or Grand river, given to them by the British Crown, for their services to the royalist cause during the United States Revolutionary war,—were no exception. Their record is even better than that of the remainder of Brant county, in which a part of the reserve, and their council seat, Ohawkeen, are located, and Brant, including the city of Brantford, lays claim to having furnished more men in proportion to its population than any other part of Canada.

Official records show that 295 of the braves of the Six Nations donned khaki. Of these 27 were killed in action, six died of sickness contracted while on active service, one was reported missing, 55 were wounded, and but one was taken prisoner. This is a record which can be compared with that of any other class or community without bringing a blush of shame to the cheeks of lovers of the Indians.

It is more than passing interest to note, that the first Brant county hero man to fall in action, was Lieut. Cameron D. Brant, a direct descendant, on both sides of the house, of that noted warrior chief and loyal British Thayanandagea, Chief Joseph Brant, whose statue adorns Victoria Park, Brantford, and whose tomb is beside His Majesty's Chapel Royal of the Mohawks, just outside the city limits, and a spot frequented by many tourists. He fell in the charge of the Fourth Battalion, when that battalion gained its name of "Mad Fourth," when they charged the hedge at Ypres in the second battle of that name.

But the Six Nations Indians who fought for democracy abroad are now ready to fight for democracy at home. For many years past the warriors have protested against the Government by "petticoats" which is today in force among the Six Nations. The system which is denounced as "petticoat government" is based upon the tribal law that the chiefs shall be named only from among the immediate family of a deceased chief, and by the women of that family. Thus, if a chief dies, the women of the chief's family meet and decide upon the succession, which goes through the distaff side. The chiefs in the aggregate form the Council of Chiefs, which rules the nations to this day, with practically all the old Indian and customs retained.

The position on the reserve to-day is what might be termed as critical, in that the war has brought to a focus the fight on the part of the warriors, for a share in the government of the nations. Conscription at first was ruled from Ottawa to have applied to them, but later this ruling was withdrawn, and the M.C.A. at no time was enforced. The warriors went voluntarily and gladly.

But the warriors claim that the Six Nations Indians' Council did not do its part. They point out that when the question of sending an Indian contingent came up, the offer of Lieut.-Col. Hamilton-McMinn, of Toronto, an honorary chief and a life-long friend of the Six Nations, to provide $25,000 for the complete equipment of two companies of Six Nations' Indians, the Six Nations' Council refused to accept the offer on the ground that they, the regular chiefs or sachems, had no right to make war, but that this should be taken up by a war council. Later in the 114th Battalion, Brock's Rangers, the Indians had a place, but unfortunately owing to the exigencies of war, this battalion was broken up and many of the men sent to forestry and construction corps, no body of Indians going to the front as a unit. The warriors also point to the fact that the Six Nations' Council refused to assist the Patriotic Fund, and that at one time the Indian soldiers' dependents were cut off, and remained without that assistance until the Haldimand County Patriotic Fund came to the rescue. As further evidence of the need for a change of government they point to the fact that the Six Nations' Council protested against conscription, and they also protested against registration to such an extent that they engaged legal talent to fight for those Indians who refused to be registered, though they claim that a huge majority was in favor of registration.

It might be interesting to point out that the basis of the decision of the Indian chiefs' council on conscription was that by treaty the Six Nations were not subjects of Canada, nor of the British Crown, but were allies of the British Crown. They claimed that under the treaty—and the treaty is still extant and bears out the claim—the King across the water could call on his allies of the Six Nations' Indians for help, in which case they must, as treaty bound, respond with all available men. Such call must come from the King himself, however, and not through the Canadian Government, which had no power over them. In this it is held the chiefs were legally correct, but the warriors maintain that despite this, the attitude of the nation was proof that the attitude of the chiefs was not that of the warriors.

Comradeship

Admiral Sir David Beatty

ADMIRAL Sir David Beatty, when speaking at Leicester a few days ago, said:—

"We have been through four and a half years of a great struggle. We have all learned something—the true value of comradeship. Comradeship has enabled us to win the war."

Realizing the significance and truth of this statement the Citizens' Liberty League appeals to the people of this Province to develop the spirit of comradeship, mutual forbearance, toleration and sympathy. Let us be fair-minded, less rigid, more reasonable, and more willing to give and take.

Samuel Gompers

The workmen of Ontario appeal for better beer—non-intoxicating beer—beer containing 2.51% alcohol by weight—THE BEER OF THE BALLOT.

Samuel Gompers, the world's greatest labor leader, stated the workman's position clearly when he said:—

"The normal men, the men of Labor who work eight hours a day and no more, the workmen who earn decent pay, the workmen who have comparatively comfortable homes, they do not want the artificial spirit. The man of normal spirit finds comfort in pleasant surroundings; he does not need, and, as a rule, will not partake of intoxicating drinks; he shuns the effects of intoxicants. What we now ask is that the men of Labor, the masses of our people, shall have the opportunity to drink a glass of beer of not more than 2 1/4% by weight of alcohol in that beer, and I am told you cannot drink enough of that character of beer to get drunk even if you tried."

Scientific tests, practical experiments and thorough research prove that beer of even greater strength than 2.51% of alcohol by weight, is absolutely non-intoxicating. (The results of these tests have been filed with the United States Circuit Court of Appeals).

As no harmful results can possibly come from drinking beer of this quality—is there any fair or logical reason why the working men should not have the more palatable beer for which they are asking—THE BEER OF THE BALLOT?

Support the working men and the Citizens' Liberty League in the endeavor to obtain a fair, just and reasonable compromise on the present too drastic prohibitory legislation.

Purina Chicken Chowder Helps Hens Moulit Few hens can produce feathers and eggs at the same time. Feathers are mostly protein. Purina Chicken Chowder helps hens moult because it runs high in protein. It is not a tonic, but a wholesome, scientific, balanced feed, to be fed with Purina Scratch Feed. These two form a perfect ration for moulting and laying hens. Grain feeds are not suitable for moulting, and unless Purina Chicken Chowder is fed, moulting will be slow, recovery slow, and the chances of winter egg laying considerably reduced.
