It is admitted on all sides that the prohibition ballot is so worded as to confuse many voters

Many people roundly condemn as a scelerate the practice of sentencing a murderer to be executed when there is no intention of carrying out the sentence

A "husband shortage" is now said by an eminent sociologist to be the gravest of the limitations with which humanity has to contend

It was stated at a meeting in Toronto that the names of over 5,000 soldiers had been left off the voters' lists in that city

"Do we have to vote four 'yes's' or four 'no's' on Oct. 20th in order not to spoil the ballot?" inquires a country reader

The Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto World writes: "The sob sisters are everywhere in evidence"

In the debate on the Civil Service bill, the Conservatives of Ontario were shown to be in favor of the retention of the patronage evil

Hamilton's Board of Control has approved of a new system of assessment, providing for an increase in assessment of 30 per cent

Kingston might have done something just a little different by not presenting one of those formal civic addresses to the Prince of Wales soldiers who had a right to vote on such an important social question. In the meantime the government passed the Ontario Temperance Act, as a war measure, and granted the demands of the temperance committee in full

The Government of Ontario has announced through the premier, Hon. Sir William Hearst, that prohibition has been a great success, but whether this is his own personal view or only his defence of a branch of his administration, is not known

Prohibition is, therefore, a clear-cut political issue and every candidate called upon to declare himself on the question

Hon. A. E. Ross, the new minister without portfolio, has many friends who advocate an acclamation, but they would like to hear from him respecting his position on prohibition

The complexities of modern civilization stand out in bold relief when contrasted with the simplicity of life as it was known when Canada was first reclaimed from the wilderness

A Canadian boy, one of thousands, is brought up in a country town in the seventies or eighties of the last century

When they bring in their eggs and vegetables to the store they very often take clothes, boots, hats, tools or machinery in exchange

The boy grows up and goes to live in a big city, depending more or less on hundreds of thousands of people, some near, others thousands of miles away

PROHIBITION AND POLITICS. In the last general election in Ontario the Liberal party's slogan was "Abolish the Bar"

In his home town he lived a life not radically different from a mechanical way from that lived by country people centuries ago century than it is a big modern city of the twentieth. And almost everybody thinks this quite commonplace

PUBLIC OPINION

Shifting the Blame. (Toronto Globe) A western pork king blames the general unrest in the country on the press

The Country's Greatest Need. (Ottawa Journal) The country's greatest need is an increased sense of individual responsibility and citizenship

The Prince's Tour. (London Daily Chronicle) His tour is not marked or enlivened by resounding speeches which make leader writers jump in their chairs

Article Ten. (Saskatoon Phoenix) Suppose one member of the League is involved in a dispute with another and an amicable settlement seems impossible

Canada-East and West. Dominion Happenings of Other Days. The Coming of Connaught. On October 8, 1869, Prince Arthur of Connaught, destined to be known in later years as The Duke of Connaught leader of men and in the time he spent with the regiment in the City of Montreal he became very popular with both privates and his fellow officers

After a career of unusual lustre in the British army where he attained the rank of Field Marshal H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught became the Governor General of Canada, arriving in the Dominion in 1911 with the Duchess and the Princess Patricia

When the forces had been well prepared he returned to England but only to carry on his war work in that island and on the continent where the Canadian troops met him on many occasions

A pretty girl is usually more ornamental than useful.
