THE TORTURES OF RHEUMATISM

Happily Stopped When He Began To Take "Fruit-a-tives"

3 OTTAWA ST., HULL, P. Q.

"For a year, I suffered with Rheumatism, being forced to stay in bed for five months. I tried all kinds of medicine without relief and thought I would never be able to walk again. One day while lying in bed, I read about "Fruit-a-tives" the great fruit medicine; and it seemed just what I needed, so I decided to try it.

The first box helped me, and I took the tablets regularly until every trace of the Rheumatism left me."

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGione Gibson

Thinking It Over.

But, as usual, all analysis of my own husband—my lover—all vague discomfort with present conditions passed, when as John lifted me from the motor he bent and kissed my lips, regardless of how it might affect passersby.

"John, John," I said, "they'll know we are just married!"

"Well, we are, aren't we?" he asked, perfectly oblivious to how anything that he should wish to do might affect any one else. At the time I did not realize that this would come to be a perfect bugbear to me. Then I thought that John's love for me was an overpowering that all the world meant nothing to him.

I was embarrassed for a moment at the conspicuous position in which he had placed me, but immediately found that I need not have worried about so small a thing, for John strode the lobby of the hotel, leaving me to follow meekly, apparently forgotten, indeed, so much so that the swinging door through which he passed nearly hit me on the face.

He was so intent upon getting the proper accommodations for that moment he had lost sight of the person for whom, presumably, he was getting them. Although I did not realize it, I have since found that this singleness of purpose, this absolute concentration upon the thing at hand, is John's predominant characteristic. It has made him the successful business man that he is, but sometimes I have thought that I would be thankful for fewer luxuries and more personal consideration.

I believe every woman feels this way—you may call it vanity or what you please—but it is a very human trait to wish to be first, not only in the heart, but in the mind of the man you love.

A man insists that this shall be so, and I have never yet met a married man who has been satisfied to be put aside for any occupation or diversion that his wife might elect to pursue. Even maternal devotion must be curbed and curtailed if one's husband wishes to be amused.

Oh, yes, I know I would be taken to task if this statement of mine were made public, but every wife in her heart will know that what I say is true.

I reached the desk in time to see that John had registered "John Gordon and wife." As he wrote the word "wife" he turned to me and smiled—but I felt as though it would have much better taste to have written "Mr. and Mrs. John Gordon." Perhaps I was unduly sensitive, but after the little episode at the door the addition of "and wife" seemed to be in the same recording category as "and valet."

I took myself to task immediately for this feeling as I realized that if I were going to be so critical, I should find quite enough to make me unhappy.

The momentous question of rooms settled, John turned to me and taking my arm with a caressing touch, walked beside me to the elevator, and as the door opened he took my physical magnetism, that the very "feel" of his hand on my arm turned my dreams from gray to gold. I forgot everything but the fact that I was John's wife—that I would be with him always—would be able to sense this adorable nearness.

I wonder if any man looks upon marriage in just the way a woman does? I believe that every American girl, brought up as I had been, to feel that when she marries the man she loves, she has reached not only the purpose, but the climax, of her existence, endows that man with certain almost superhuman qualities. She is bound to be disappointed because no one has told her that her lover and her husband are quite as different as though they were no kin.

My mother and father had led such a different wedded existence from the usual married life, that I had built up a dream that was impossible of fulfillment. It was a dream wherein the first thought of both husband and wife should be of each other—wherein they would be that "one" of which the marriage bond speaks.

I know now that such a thing is impossible, and it only makes for unhappiness to teach our daughters that "love is all," while from the first our sons estimate love at a truer value.

Some of this must have shown in my face, for John pulled me down upon his knee, and looking into my eyes said: "What's the matter, girl? Aren't you happy?"

"Perfectly," I answered truthfully, for even now I know that when John smiles and puts his arms around me, I am happy.

Black Lace Showed Every Evidence of Strong Popularity in Paris During the Autumn, and It Will Be Featured by Americans for Evening Gowns.

Paris, Oct. 8.—The French designers intend to make black lace an alluring part of an afternoon gown. Mme. Rense, who named a gown after herself and sold it to a large number of American buyers, put a black Chantilly lace ruffle on a black and blue chiffon tunic which constituted a gown that could be worn from the lunch hour to midnight, with or without a hat.

The tunic of this gown had blue pastilles pasted on it, which is a new form of adornment that America has not seen and that France likes. Instead of expensive embroidery, the designers use colored pastilles in this velvet, of velours, or even satin and chiffon; these are arranged in rows or circles or merely placed close together to hide the foundation.

Doucet created an admirable afternoon gown in blue velvet with threads of tiny blue-black sequins arranged on two panels that fell from collar bone to knees. He then introduced the cascades of black Chantilly lace at the open sides.

Bullos used black lace wherever he found it attractive. He does not hesitate to use any material he wishes, for any hour of the day, caring nothing for the tradition that governs fabrics.

CHOOSE FURS NOW

Novelties for Coming Season Have Made Their Appearance.

Midsummer fur sales this year have many novelties to offer, not so much a new pelts as in the shape and general style design of the garments. The doorman is to be a leader, it is said, and it will appear in a variety of lengths. For the woman who likes extreme styles a number of fitted models are being brought out. One of the latest is called the "redingote" because it is really cut much on the same general style line as the redingote dress, with fitted bodice section and long skirt of pepitum, usually cut away in front so that a front panel of the skirt or dress over which it is worn may be seen.

Another novelty is the square cut short coat with loose panel back, collar and cuffs of fur contrasting with that used for the coat proper. Collars, especially when made of a different fur from that used for the coat, are usually enormous affairs, really large enough to qualify as small separate caps.

The smart little neckpiece of one or two skins sold in the spring will not be discarded immediately by Dame Fashion, and the woman who owns one may wear it with perfect serenity right through the autumn days as an accompaniment for her tailored street frock or untrimmed tailored suit. Mink, marten and sable were the most used pelts for these smart little neckpieces. They were shown made of one, two or three skins, the smaller ones being little more than choker collars.

Full length fur coats are shown, but by far the smartest models are those that are hip or three-quarter length, except, of course, when designed for evening wear. For general wear the full length coat is heavy, and a short model is not only less expensive but gives all the protection required.

Two nineteen-year-old girls are walking from Dallas, Tex., to New York for a forfeit of $1,000. The extremist is anything but a safe adviser.

THE HOUSEHOLD

ABOUT SILK STOCKINGS.

If you haven't time to take care of silk stockings—and haven't a maid to do those things for you—well, then the best thing to do is to wear cotton stockings. Because silk hose simply needs careful attention, and no matter how well it is made or of how choice silk it will wear out if carelessly used—no manufacturer's guarantee will save it.

The whole point is that silk stockings ought never to be worn more than once between washings. They ought never to be worn when they are dusty or—and this is more important—they ought never to be permitted to lie with the moisture from the feet still in them. So it is not enough to put them on fresh every time you wear them, but if you want them to live long useful lives you should rinse them out very soon after you have taken them off. Perhaps you do not care to do this, but if you do not, then do not complain about the quality silk stockings you have bought.

Manufacturers of silk stockings say that the leather stain spots, stockings as such as perspiration. That is another reason why they should be rinsed out after wearing and not allowed to stay on for days before they are washed. Another thing that you ought to know is that stockings ought never to be dried in strong sunlight, as this tends to fade the best dyes and there is nothing more forlorn looking than a black silk stocking that is fading brown.

And be very careful in removing your shoes to see that the eyelets or other fasteners do not catch in the mesh of the stockings and tear it. One thing that makes runs in stockings is hose supporters. You simply must not wear them tight. It is not a difficult matter or one that takes much time to put extensions on your hose supporters if they are too short. Some women who always find that there is considerable strain from hose supporters have pieces of cotton cloth stitched on the tops of their stockings to act as reliefs where they need reinforcement most. If you are tall and of heavy build you will find, however, that if you buy "opera length" stockings, although they are quite a little more expensive, they will be worth the price because they wear so much better than those that are not ample enough for you.
