* An Indian Rip Van Winkle

N his "Book of the National Parks," Robert Sterling Yard recalls a delightful old Indian parallel to Irving's story of Rip van Winkle-or perhaps it is the original of Irving's Rip.

The hero of the Mount Rainier story was a wise and wily fisherman and hunter. He always had salmen and berries when food became scarce and prices high. Gradually he amassed large savings in hiaqua, the little perforated shell which was the most valued form of wampum, the Indian's money. The richer he got the stronger his passion grew for hiaqua, and, when a spirit told him in a dream of vast hoards at the summit of Rainier, he determined to climb the mountain. The spirit was Terrified, he threw back into the bowl behind him five strings of hiaqua to propitiate Tamanous, and there followed a momentary lull, during which he started homeward. way home. Everything was strangely altered. Ancient trees grew where shrubs had grown four days before, Cedars under whose shade he used to sleep lay rotting on the ground. Where his lodge had stood now he saw a new and handsome lodge, and presently out of it came a very old, decrepit squaw, who, nevertheless, through her wrinkles, had a look that seemed strangely familiar to him. Her shoulders were hung thick with hiaqua strings. She bent over a pot of boiling salmon and crooned:

'My old man has gone, gone, gone, My old man to Tacouma has gone. To hunt the elk he went long ago. When will he come down, down,

To salmon pot and me?"

"He has come down," quavered the returned traveler, at last recognizing his wife.

He asked no questions. Charging it all to the wrath of Tamanous, he accepted fate as he found it. After all, it was a happy fate enough in the end, for the old man became the Great Medicine-Man of his tribe, by whom he was greatly revered, War's Aftermath as Found In the Newspapers.

When an Englishman wishes to focus public attention upon his pet schemes; when he wants to start a new religion or propagate an old one; when he wants money or a new collie pup, he advertises in the columns of his favorite newspaper. There is a wealth of human interest in those advertising columns of the great British dailies. None of the usual British "Cascarets" work while you sleep! | keep you anxious all next day like ity and the charwoman, the jobless and the wealthy, all unite in the effort to gain the public eye and ear. There is more than a dash of the so Canadian verbal comments on May 1, visible in some of the efforts to attract attention. The following is a typical example: Un-British cruelty --- No mediumsize houses to let, outskirts London, gentle-born. Did all considerate > Householders in the best parts of London, on the other hand, reveal to the world the innermost secrets of their menage. One may readily ascertain how many maids and menservants are maintained, the number of appetites that must be satisfied, the frequency of guests and similar matters. The English servant is also cautious to a degree, for many prospective employers take pains to forewarn applicants that there are "no knives or boots," and often that there are no coal fires, that parlor and scullery maids are kept and that charwomen are employed twice week-

References are very much more important than in America. Practically no position is open except to those who can furnish "characters." It is the same whether the place demands a man with a salary of many hundreds or a shopgirl with a guinea

Until the expiration of the war the demand for "Lady Shorthand-Typists" was heavy and a system of yearly or half-yearly bonuses was instituted. The requirements would be extraordinary in this country, and particularly at the low wages of $13.50 in the following offer: "Merchant's Office - Shorthand typist (lady) required in merchant's office. Permanent position. French. Spanish essential. Salary £3 week; bonus half-yearly. Hours 9.30 to 6. Wire, stating age, experience, speeds, to Pim, 19, Bury street, E.C. 3." For lesser accomplishments the rate falls to £2 and £2 10s.

Another aftermath of the war is visible in the many appeals for aid. The personal columns often reveal the tragedies of the Flanders Field or of the lone watches in the North Sea, or of the "spurlos versenkt" policy. There are the minor tragedies of the demobilized and crippled soldier who cannot find employment, of the men who are no longer fit for their trades, and of many others. There are also the gloomy, despairing appeals such as this one:

"Lady, with two young children left penniless under most tragic circumstances, implores help. Particulars and references. Box G 26, the

Another influence of the war is apparent in a great many "ads." In two or three inches of a column it is possible to find men who wish to go to South Angola or Demerara or New South Wales, and the established colonies like India and South Africa also furnish much desired fields. These efforts to obtain employment reflect the industrial status of the mother country at this time, because most of those men who wish to emigrate are discharged officers with records of capable and efficient service, the class of men that seldom has difficulty in finding employment at Measuring the Earth. An effort is being made to induce the Commonwealth and its six states to combine to provide £3,000 for measuring the earth, that is, for obtaining an accurate determination of Australian longitude by means of wireless signals sent out from Aden and Darien (Panama) to Sydney, New South Wales, and Greenwich. Dr. J. M. Baldwin, Victorian Government astronomer, says that in order to measure the earth it is necessary to have two wireless stations at places called A and B. The exact local time at each station having been observed by the stars a series of wireless signals is sent from a third station C and the difference in times of reception of the signals at A and B enable the determining of the longitude in hours, minutes and seconds, which can be easily worked out as degrees, minutes and seconds. Similar experiments in 1913 showed that the meridian of longitude at Washington was one-twentieth of a second out and the imaginary line had to be moved about fifty feet,

Faithful London Bobby

To Receive Higher Pay,

And He Earns His Wages * HE British "Bobby" has received a raise of $10 a week over his pre-war pay. The demands of the men who preserve law and order were admitted at the time to be just, and the only point of difference that the committee failed to settle satisfactorily to the police is the question of union recognition. This possibly may be overcome by a Government committee that will deal with all claims or grievances, on which the men will have representation.

The new pay scale, which starts at $17.50 a week for junior men. represents an increase of more than $10, compared with pre-war wages. For this small remuneration the policeman was supposed to be infailible, and any slight lapse met with sharp punishment. He was appointed only after he had passed examinations that would puzzle many a university graduate. In London the policeman is expected to be a directory and more or less an encyclopedia of information. His training lasts six months, during which he attends an instruction class and learns all the beats of the division.

At school he is taught, among other things, to be a sound lawyer, a bit of a medical man, a statesman and a diplomat, a keen observer and a ool, impartial witness, a boxer and a strategist, a fluent reader, a guide to London, a peacemaker, at times a linguist, and always to turn out smartly, clean and a credit to the

On the streets he must be ready always to apply his knowledge accurately to the needs of the moment. He must be able to decide offhand for what offences he may make an arrest and those that have to be dealt with only by summons. Everything he does is the subject of a written report, even little things like a ride on a public vehicle while on duty have to be reported. If he spends only two cents in carfare, before he can collect this sum he must report the number of the ticket.

If he should make a mistake regarding the licence number of an offending driver and summons the wrong man, he has to pay the cost of the summons and the expenses of the victim of his mistake. In spite of the low pay and the Golf of Lowly Origin.

If tennis has a royal lineage, golf, which was later regarded as a rich man's game, had most plebian beginnings, writes I. R. Apparently it was first played on ice, being one all the broad you cant upon the waof the winter sports adapted to the physical geography of the Low Countries.
