PRINCE ACCEPTS QUEEN'S DEGREE

A Special Convocation Held in Honor of His Royal Highness.

STUDENTS ROARED WELCOME

TO THE HEIR OF THE BRITISH THRONE

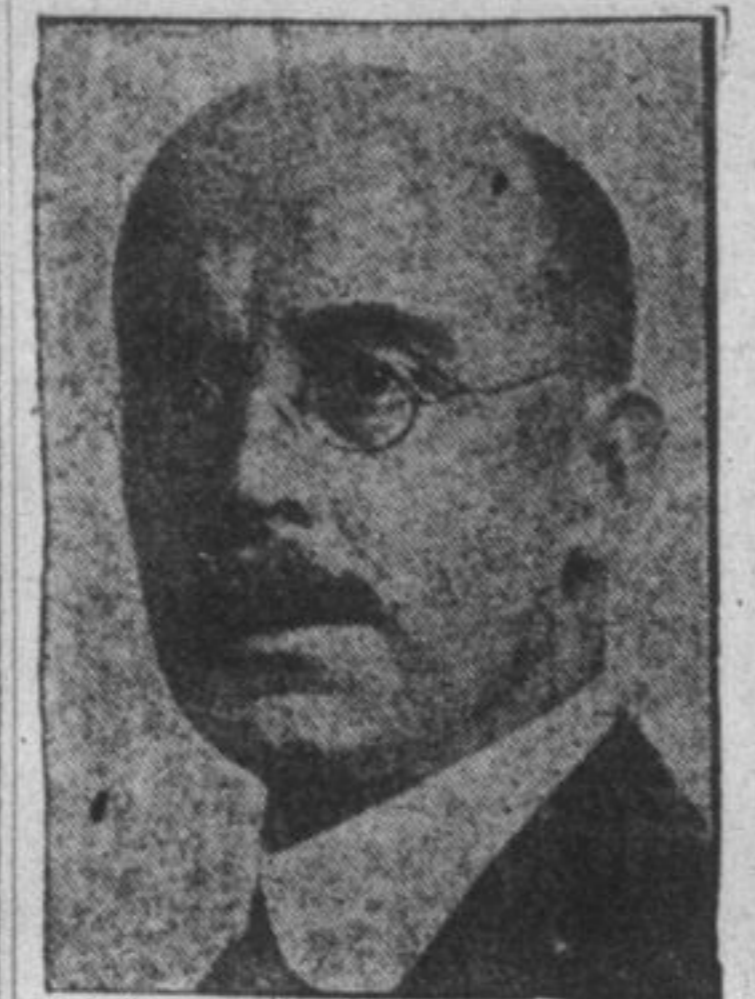

A Very Happy Reply Made by the Prince in Accepting the Degree From Chancellor Beatty.

"In the name of this University, Sir, I confer upon you this degree, with all its rights and privileges."

With these words, Chancellor E. W. Beatty bestowed upon His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, the degree of Doctor of Laws, at a special Convocation of Queen's University, held in Grant Hall at 6.30 o'clock on Saturday evening.

Grant Hall was filled to overflowing with the most distinguished audience for the occasion. The young Prince captivated the audience, and was loudly cheered at intervals during the proceedings, which were very short, lasting in all just twenty minutes.

The students roared out in masses, the gallery being filled to capacity.

and for half an hour before the ceremonies commenced, sang college songs and gave college yells, much to the delight of the large assemblage.

His Royal Highness marched in the academic procession with Chancellor Beatty with whom he was in earnest converse and as the procession made its way to the platform, the audience sang the hymn, "O God of Bethel." The Prince was attired in a grey suit, and looked a mere slip of a boy as he made his way to the platform with the eyes of everyone, in the hall focused on him. Bishop Bidwell opened the proceedings with prayer, and the reading of the 72nd Psalm.

Principal Taylor's Address. Following this Principal Bruce Taylor delivered an address in presenting His Royal Highness for the degree. He said:

"Mr. Chancellor, it is my high privilege to present to you for degree of doctor of laws, honora causa, His Royal Highness Edward Albert Christian, Prince of Wales, K.G. Queen's University has pride in being able to bestow upon him this honor, the highest that its senate can command. The Prince comes to visit us at a time profoundly important for Canadian institutions and imperial development. The days were when it was held by many to be inevitable that distance from the homeland and occasional diversity of interest would loosen the old bonds and create a new situation: Never was prophecy more completely falsified. Canada knows herself now to be more closely bound to the old allegiance than ever before. There have been great empires before the British Empire, empires held together by strenuous administration or by loyalty to a symbol. But the British Empire, of which we are so proud to form a part, has come out of this desperate struggle, wounded indeed, as all the combatants have been wounded, but with a new passion for the institutions on behalf of which such sacrifices have been willingly made, with a new wonder that so mighty a fabric should be knit together by so intangible a thing as devotion to an idea. The ties are all the more powerful in that they bind the heart and not the limbs.

"His Royal Highness is visiting Canada as the representative of His Majesty the King, and he must have felt as he traversed these broad spaces that the flag did indeed stand for a genuine ideal. The world set forth the things that hold for overseas dominions so closely to the motherland. Far greater than any geographical questions, problems that may relate to a vast extent of country and yet may be essentially provincial affairs, there is the sense of racial solidarity. We are one people. When one branch is attacked all are endangered. And when it is the old country which is most chiefly threatened, broad sentiment and old associations overwhelm all narrow issues and we fling ourselves without reserve into the struggle.

"As members of Queen's University a university which was founded in the earliest years of the reign of Queen Victoria and was called after her, we desire to assure His Royal Highness that the old loyalties stand fast, and in proof of it we would set forth the long honor roll of the university in the war. As far as we know about 1,380 men enlisted and 168 have fallen.

"It is not, however, only in his representative capacity that we desire to honor the Prince of Wales. Every community in the Empire is now a soldier community, and everywhere the heart warms to bravery which carries itself lightly. It is due to no caution on the part of His Royal Highness that he is alive today. Rumor is indeed a lying jade, if it be not the long honor roll of the university in the war. As far as we know about 1,380 men enlisted and 168 have fallen.

"For these reasons, Sir, I beg to present His Royal Highness for the degree of Doctor of Laws."

The Chancellor's Address. Following the address of Principal Bruce Taylor, Chancellor Beatty spoke briefly:

"Your Highness," said the Chancellor, "on behalf of the trustees and senate, faculty, graduates and undergraduates, I desire to express to you their deep sense of honor and appreciation on the acceptance of this degree. Your long trip, through Canada has been wonderful for the Empire and the Dominion, and in no place has the inspiration of your visit been more kindly felt than among the men of the Canadian universities, and in no university to a greater degree than Queen's. (Loud applause.) Chancellor Beatty then said: "In the name of this university, Sir, and by authority of royal charter, I confer upon you this degree of doctor of laws, with all its rights and privileges."

His Royal Highness was then lauded by Prof. John Watson, the vice-principal, and this ceremony over, the students gave Queen's yell with a vim, followed by tremendous applause from the audience.

Reply of the Prince. "Mr. Chancellor, ladies and gentlemen," said His Royal Highness, in reply, "I feel particularly proud to be made Doctor of Laws of Queen's University. I appreciate the honor which has been conferred on me. I realize how much this university has done towards helping to build the great Dominion of Canada, and the splendid educational advantages it affords to its students.

"You have men and women from all parts of the dominion, and all the great professions of Canada are stamped by their work and their character. I congratulate the university on the splendid part it played during the great war. I know a large number of Queen's graduates and undergraduates who went overseas, and served in the Canadian corps, and I know what they did. I also know the casualties of the university were heavy, as has been read out. I offer my deepest sympathy to the Alma Mater of those gallant men who fell for King and Empire, and for the common cause.

"May Queen's University's future be as successful and prosperous as has been its past, is my earnest wish, and I can assure you that I shall always follow the University's interests very closely. Again I thank you for the kind welcome you have given me."

Queen's yell and more cheering followed the address of His Royal Highness, and the proceedings were brought to a close with three cheers and a tiger for the Prince, and the singing of the National Anthem.

The audience remained standing while the Prince, with the chancellor and principal and members of the convocation marched out of Grant Hall. His Royal Highness took a keen interest in all the proceedings, and appeared to be greatly delighted with the college yells and the manner in which they were given by the male students and the fair co-eds. The latter occupied one side of the gallery, and His Royal Highness gave several shy glances in their direction during the ceremonies.

Placed Wreath On Monument. While en route to the cricket field, on Saturday, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales stopped for a few minutes to place a wreath at the foot of the monument of Sir John A. Macdonald in the City Park. Sir John was a great friend of the late Queen Victoria, and the latter put great dependence on him.
