WORKMAN MEETS DEATH Harmless Means Of Reducing Fat

BY BREAKDOWN OF DERRICK AT ROCKWOOD HOSPITAL

Luke McDonald, Aged 60, Killed About Noon Saturday—An Inquest Opened But Adjourned.

Injuries received in the breakdown of a derrick used on the work of constructing the Nurses' Home, at Rockwood Hospital, caused the death of Luke McDonald, aged 60, about noon on Saturday.

Coroner D. E. Mundell opened an inquest at the police station on Saturday night, to enquire into the circumstances surrounding the death of McDonald, but adjourned till Monday night in order to secure additional evidence.

McDonald was a native of this city, being a son of Michael McDonald. He had only been on the job at Rockwood a very short time, and prior to this, had been employed at the locomotive works. He was unmarried, and when not employed made his home with his brother, Frank McDonald, who lives at Loughboro Lake Bridge. For some years he was engaged on the erection of bridges for the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is survived by two brothers, James of Lismore, and Frank. The latter was present at the inquest on Saturday night.

Dr. W. K. Ross superintendent at Rockwood Hospital, was the first witness called at Saturday night's sitting of the jury. He told about the deceased being employed on the construction of the Nurses' Home at Rockwood Hospital. He was notified about the accident and found McDonald lying in the bottom of the excavation, near the large derrick. His nose was bleeding, and there was a gash on the right side of his head. He was breathing and after making an examination witness had him removed to the hospital, but he died a few minutes after he reached the building. Asked as to the cause of death by the Coroner, witness said death was due to hemorrhage from a fracture of the base of the skull.

George Druce, general foreman for McKelvey & Birch Ltd., said that about 11.20 Saturday morning he received a hurried call to the work, taking with him Mr. Radcliffe, the company's architect, who had some points to clear up regarding construction, before he left the city on the noon train. Witness stated that on their arrival at Rockwood they met John Haggarty, in charge of the work there for McKelvey & Birch Ltd. Mr. Radcliffe and Mr. Haggarty had a talk over the making of the hand derrick into a steam derrick, and while they were discussing this matter, witness went over to the derrick. He said he could see very plainly that matters would be in the best of order to make the change from hand to steam power. Witness looked over the cable, and listened to suggestions from the workmen and then came to the conclusion as to how the work could be done. Mr. Haggarty then came along, and witness discussed the matter with him, and they finally decided on a scheme which they thought would work out alright.

Continuing, the witness told of the preparations made and eventually the boom was raised probably two feet above a bank of clay. The boom was swung around to an angle of about forty-five degrees, which would bring the boom over near the section of the excavation. The boom was moved by Mr. Haggarty and none of the workmen were in the way of the boom at that time. It was then raised to an angle of forty-five feet or about half of its height. In this position it remained while all interested were satisfied that the idea which had been worked out would be practicable. In this position it remained for fifteen or twenty minutes. During this time the witness was close to the centre of the derrick.

"Suddenly the boom dropped without anyone working at the machine to my knowledge," said the witness. The noise attracted my attention to the point where it fell. On its way down the boom struck the bank, and in the jar one of the legs of the boom was dismantled and knocked out of its bearings.

Witness said the deceased was standing with a pick in his hand but fell to the ground afterwards. Aman's hat was knocked off his head but he thought the hat belonged to one of McDonald's fellow workmen.

Witness said he had examined the cable and none of it was broken. None of the forgings were broken. He found the forging that fastened to the top of the derrick in the excavation. How it came there he did not know. The derrick had then descended from Roddy & Monk, contractors, and was partly erected. The end of boom had been broken in falling.

"If the cable had been properly keyed could it have fallen?" witness was asked.

"I could not say," was the reply. John Haggarty, foreman in charge of the work for McKelvey & Birch Ltd., said he had a gang of men at work to put the derrick up. When the work was partly completed he found a mistake in the wall. The boom was up twenty minutes. He did not see it fall or see the man hit. He noticed McDonald straighten up and then fall. The derrick had been put up shortly after 8 o'clock in the morning.

Asked as to who was responsible for the work, witness said he was not there all the time, but he found everything going satisfactorily. He had examined the forging and found it in first-class shape. Witness was under the boom at times. He said the derrick was just being put into position, and he would have made an examination of it before he would have allowed it to be used.

Arthur Smith, a youth of eighteen years, said he had been employed to put up the cable on the top of the boom. He had been instructed by Mr. Haggarty as to what to do. He had never done a job of this kind before, but had seen it done in quarries. Witness had been employed by McKelvey & Birch Ltd., for about eight months.

John Roddy, quarry owner, said the derrick in question was a practically new one, having been purchased in 1914.

"If this cable had been properly keyed would it have dropped?" witness was asked.

"I would say not, but it is a pretty hard question to say if it was properly keyed."

A WEEK-END VISIT PREVENTED BY DEATH

Luke McDonald, who met an untimely death on Saturday, as the result of the breaking down of a derrick at Rockwood Hospital, Saturday, had planned to spend the week-end with his brother, Frank, McDonald, at the latter's home at Loughboro Lake Bridge. His brother was waiting to welcome him, when he received the news of his sudden death.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Trip Recalled.
Kingston, Oct. 31. (To the Editor): To partake of your valuable space with a view of being useful at some other time. Just an incident occurring in the fall of 1918. I was employed as wheelman on the tug Laura Grace, commissioned towing outside of the pier, I steered due north for three quarters of an hour. "Starboard," came the command and west one quarter north. "Aye Aye sir" in answer. The captain seated himself in the armchair, Engineer Thomas Hazlett came up on deck after a while, and enquired what rate we were traveling. The barges went six miles an hour and everything was "jake". But about 10 o'clock there was a change. The wind came up from the south or southwest. My binocular light went out. There was a very heavy sea, and as I looked at the clock I found it was stopped. The Laura Grace was bathing herself like a duck. The port side was the weather side, with seas coming aboard. "Starboard," was the next command. By and by a light came out, and it turned out to be Sodus Point. My mate relieved me. We were getting under the lee of the south shore. We made the harbor, but the two warnings, the light going out and the clock stopping, no doubt saved the Laura Grace.

Unnecessary.
Mr. Bain—"You ought to brace up and show your wife who is running things at your home."
Mr. Meek (sassy)—"It isn't necessary. She knows."
Strike Wanted.
"My daughter practises five hours a day," said Mr. Cumrox.
"Surely she will become a great artist."
"I hope so. Anyway, I hope she'll soon get far enough along to join a musical union and strike for shorter hours."

Another Substitute.
Binks—"The undertaker to that chicken pie you brought me was abominably tough."
Waiter—"There wasn't any undertaker to that pie, sir; it was served on a paper plate, and you've eaten it."

He Left Her.
Miss Fortyodd awoke in the middle of the night to find a burglar ransacking her effects. Miss Fortyodd did not scream, for she prided herself among other things, upon her courage. Pointing to the door with a dramatic gesture, she exclaimed:

"Leave me at once!"

The burglarly politely retreated a step and said:

"I had no intention of taking you."

Dangerous Germs.
"You claim there are microbes in kisses?" she asked the young doctor.

"There are," he said.

"What diseases do they bring?" she asked.

"Palpitation of the heart."

Insult Without Words.
"I understand the returned soldier Harold met insulted him. What did the soldier say to him?"

"Nothing. He merely put on his gas mask when Harold began to tell of the wonderful improvements he had made in his boss's methods."
