

GANANOQUE

(From Our Own Correspondent.) Nov. 3.—Rev. Father Hubert Cunningham, of the Passionist Order, Hoboken, N.J., has conducted a very successful mission for the past week in St. John's church. The closing services were held yesterday and were largely attended.

The funeral of the late John McArdie was held Saturday afternoon from the family home, corner First and River street, to St. John's church and thence to the vault at Gananoque cemetery, and was largely attended. Gananoque objective in the Victory Loan campaign for 1910 has been set at $240,000. The local canvassers, A. W. Taylor, J. Arthur Jackson, W. B. Middle and George K. Taylor, have during the week taken in about 25 per cent. of that amount.

The Misses Wallace, who have spent the entire season at their island residence, "Camp Iroquois," a few miles west of the town, broke camp at the week-end and returned to their home in Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Randall Mills and Miss Lee spent the past few days in Hamilton, where they represented the A.Y.P.A. of Christ church as delegates to the A.Y.P.A. convention.

Robert Haig, King street, and Thomas Nuttall, Brock street, left during the past few days for the northern section of this province to be on the spot for the opening of the season for big game.

Mrs. J. N. Knowlton, King street, spending some time with relatives in Buffalo, N.Y., returned home the latter part of the week, accompanied by her mother, who will spend some time here with her.

E. E. Howe, V.S., a former practitioner here, located for some time past at Renfrew, spent a few days in town the latter part of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Nuttall, North street, spending the season at Ivy Lea, have returned to town for the winter.

F. S. Evanson, of the Oddfellows' Relief Association, was in town the latter part of the week.

Mrs. Frederick Wills and children, of Seely's Bay, spent the week-end with the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Wilson, Garden street.

Mrs. John McLaughlin, Osborne street, spent a short time in Kingston with friends during the past few days.

HUNTING THE KANGAROO.

Australian Hunters Use Automobiles to Round Them Up.

Three sturdy automobiles, each bearing several men armed with heavy army rifles, sped through the Australian landscape. They come from Adelaide, South Australia, and head northward toward the heart of the plain which extends in unbroken dreariness for hundreds of miles in that direction. The lookout in the leading car scans the horizon with a field-glass.

"There they are!" he calls out, pointing to a slight rise. The heads of a few kangaroos are plainly visible above the salt brush, which grows beyond Burra Burra, the jumping-off place of civilization.

The whirl of the engines must reach the animals' sensitive ears; for they take to flight with tremendous bounds. At a distance of 300 yards they stop.

The automobiles continue in their wild rush over the rough ground, and now the hunters let their rifles speak.

One of the animals is wounded. The remainder of the herd, keeping well together, leap away in one direction, while the wounded animal hops with terrific speed in the opposite direction. The nearest car takes up the pursuit, and for three miles continues in its course, parallel to that taken by the wounded kangaroo. The brush becomes thinner and the hunters head their car in a straight line for the animal, which shifts its course to an angle that brings it directly across the path of the oncoming car.

A well-aimed shot ends the flight. Now, back to the pursuit of the rest of the herd. After a drive of a few miles the animals are sighted. At a distance of fifty or sixty yards the hunters open fire, killing four of the animals. The fifth, a young kangaroo, takes to the open country. The hunters have decided to catch it alive. As they approach their prey, one of the hunters creeps forward on the running-board, seizes the kangaroo by the tail and manages to hold on to both car and animal until the car is stopped.

Each year, during the prolonged drought in the Australian bush sections, the kangaroo becomes a pest in the farming sections, great numbers invading the ranches and destroying the crops. Before automobiles were pressed into service kangaroo-hunting was almost a hopeless job.

War Words We're Borrowed. While we have added scores of new words to the English language during the war, it is odd, and perhaps significant that only one of them is actually taken from the enemy. That is "strate," and in all probability that one word will remain. There is, of course, "Zep," but the Zep is already becoming a mere memory, and this word will most likely die out.

In the past we have not been so particular, and as a matter of fact, nearly all our war terms have a foreign origin. "Dragon" and "cuirassier" are both French words. The original dragons bore a dragon on their shield, while cuirassier wore breast-plates of copper, for which the French is "cuivre."

"Huszar" comes from the Hungarian word "Husz," meaning "twenty." In Hungary every twentieth recruit was placed in a cavalry regiment. The bayonet, of course, takes its name from the French town of Bayonne, while "pistol" is derived from the Italian town called Pistoia, once famous for its munition factories.

"Lieutenant" is French, but "major" is Latin, or perhaps Spanish. The Spanish is "amayr," meaning "in a superior position."

"Lewitzer," oddly enough, is really the Czech word "houfajce." This was originally applied to a sort of catapult for throwing stones. How it came to us is "wrapt in mystery."

"Musket" is from the Italian "moschetto," which was really a species of hawk, but was applied to a sort of small mortar.

"Arsenal," as most people are aware, is one of the very few English words taken direct from the Arabic. Its adoption takes us right back to the Crusades.

"Frotilia" and "armada" are, of course, pure Spanish, while the grenades which played so large a part in the great war owe their name to the Spanish city of Grenada, and "commandeer"—used by the Boers in South Africa—has long become a part of our language.—Pearson's.

Whistler's Peacock Room. The history of Whistler's celebrated Peacock Room is entertainingly told in a new book by Dr. G. C. Williamson called "Murray Marks and His Friends." One of Murray Marks was F. R. Leyland, a wealthy Londoner who wished to reconstruct a prosaic London house on Venetian lines. He spent £1,000 on some wonderful Cordova leather for one of his rooms. Whistler painted a picture for the room. He thought the leather too dark as a background for the picture, and in Leyland's absence painted the leather and the entire apartment until the wonderful Peacock Room resulted. Leyland was exasperated because his beautiful leather had been painted over. Marks resented the change because his blue and white china (he was a ceramic specialist) no longer had a suitable background, and Jeckyll, the architect of the new house, became dejected when he saw what had been done. Eventually, however, the wonderful Peacock Room of this story was recognized as a masterpiece of decoration even by Leyland and Marks. After Leyland's death it was removed from his house, and it now forms part of the priceless Whistler collection of Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, together with the famous picture by Whistler which caused all the trouble.

FEAR THAT ARRIPRIOR LUMBERMEN ARE LOST

Mystery Surrounds the Disappearance of Men on a Fishing Trip.

Arriprior, Nov. 3.—Mystery surrounds the disappearance of two well known Arriprior young men who have been missing from the McLachlan Bros. Lumber Camp, which is situated about fifteen miles from Brule Lake siding.

The two men, Arthur Dobbs and Thomas Desormia, apparently left the lumber camp early Sunday morning on a fishing or hunting trip and were both in good health, but owing to the rough nature of the country, it is possible that the two have wandered into the woods. Every effort is being made to locate them, although word was received here last night that no trace of them can be found.

Arthur Dobbs is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Dobbs, who reside near here, and Thomas Desormia is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Desormia, of Arriprior. Dobbs is a returned soldier.

A pretty wedding took place on Oct. 29th, when Euretta Bernice, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Bolton, Portland, was united in marriage to William James Burns, only son of Hugh Burns, New Boyne.
