Some People Like to Gamble—Even when they buy Clothes

You know them—men who buy their garments "any old place" and trust to luck that they'll get their money's worth.

Fortunately, men who purchase clothes on a "pot luck" basis are few. The majority buy where they can depend upon Reliability and Value of the merchandise.

That is why the majority wear Robinson's Clothes.

That is why I sell more clothes than any other clothier in Canada.

The Value Of The Home

The man who can afford to own a home—and the average man of reasonable earning capacity can—should make it his first concern to solve the problem. He will be aided in that task by studying the real estate offerings closely and investigating those which impress him favorably. He will thus be serving himself, his family and his city. To every such man, we would say "Get a home to rally around."

An American Who Became a Peer

WILLIAM WALDORF ASTOR, Viscount Hever, one of the richest men in the world, and at one time one of the most discussed, died on October 19. This was the Astor who shook the dust of America from his feet and became a British subject. For nearly thirty years he pursued his ambition to enter the peerage, despite any discouragements and rebuffs. It was not until the war came and he opened his deep purse to his adopted country that the King saw fit to honor him, and it must be said that Viscount Astor was deserving of honor. He gave millions, and not only gave but showed that here was at least one British subject of German blood who was intensely loyal to the land of his adoption. Nevertheless, when he was created a baron there was much criticism of this act of royal favor, on the ground that other men equally generous had been passed over. However, the country was then in the throes of the war and not a great deal of attention was paid to an incident so trifling, but the comment showed that the old prejudice against Astor had not died, though it was far from being as strong as when it made life in England not much more pleasant than it had been in the United States.

William Waldorf Astor was the son of John Jacob Astor, the third, and inherited the bulk of his fortune. He was probably the richest of the Astors. From boyhood he was trained in the management of the huge estate that was one day to be his, but this was irksome to him, and he turned to politics. He was elected to the New York Assembly and later to the Senate. When he offered himself as a candidate for Congress he was defeated, and it is said that this was a blow from which he took a long time to recover; but his pride must have been appeased when shortly afterward President Arthur appointed him ambassador to Italy. While there he amused himself as an author and produced a couple of novels now forgotten, but probably what one might have expected from a millionaire. He also showed some interest in art, which he had inherited from his mother, she being a woman of unusual taste and charm. After his term of office he returned to the United States and suddenly displayed a keen interest in society. He built a great establishment at Newport and made no secret of the fact that he and his wife were the dictators of American society, and were prepared to meet all comers in defence of their title.

It was about this time that he ran foul of the American newspapers. It appears that another Mrs. Astor was the pretender to the social throne, and she also lived at Newport. One day Mr. Astor informed the postmaster that all letters that came addressed simply to "Mrs. Astor" should be forwarded to his wife. The newspapers commented derisively on this news, and also on the act, or alleged fact, that Mrs. William Waldorf Astor had actually copyrighted the name "Mrs. Astor." Another cause of offence and one which more readily entitled Mr. Astor to sympathy was when the Charlie Ross case was recalled as the result of an alleged confession, and a New York newspaper indulged in speculations as to what ransom would be demanded if the eldest son of the Astors should be kidnapped. This story was widely copied and gave Mr. Astor deep anger, because he and his wife both feared that the idea of kidnapping their son might be thus planted in the mind of some desperate man. Indeed, it was said that worry over the possibility seriously impaired Mr. Astor's health.

Then it was that Mr. Astor announced his intention of going to England to live, because "newspapers made the United States unfit for a gentleman." His remark was treated with jeers, and it is to be admitted that when he established himself in England certain newspapers there were not more kind. The Astors, however, upon introduced themselves to English society, and bade fair to enter upon a brilliant career when Mr. Astor had the misfortune to get himself "in Dutch," as he said, with King Edward. It appears that one of the King's intimates was Admiral Sir Barclay Milne, and one night the admiral, after dining with some friends, went with them to an Astor reception. The admiral had not been invited, but it was and is an English custom for invited guests to take with them their own dinner guests to after dinner functions. Whether Mr. Astor was aware of this custom or whether, as is suspected, he had previously been snubbed by Sir Barclay, is not exactly known. At any rate he demanded a cheque or ticket from the admiral, and his inability to produce a definite and legally binding invitation led to his being asked to withdraw.

King Edward was indignant, and the unfortunate Astor was made to feel the weight of his displeasure, for society naturally took its cue from the King, and for a time it appeared that the Astors' social ambitions were a closed chapter. Later on King Edward, with his proverbial good nature, relented, and was several times seen in the company of Mr. Astor, who was then a naturalized British subject.

Mr. Astor raised a laugh at one time by publishing the Astor genealogy, proving that they were descended from a well-known Spanish family of the tenth century. Since everybody knew that the Astors were first discovered in Waldorf, Germany, about a hundred years ago, this effort deceived nobody.

Tartar on Teeth Shows You Leave the Film

All Statements Approved by High Dental Authorities

Free

A 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to show you its effects. See coupon.

Remove the Film

Film is the basis of tartar. It is the source of discolored teeth and decay.

In brushing teeth you leave a slimy film. You can feel it with your tongue. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. Your tooth paste cannot dissolve it. Most tooth troubles are now traced to that clinging film.

That film is what discolors—not the teeth. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. So the one great object in cleaning teeth should be to end that film.

Dental science, after years of searching has found a way to do that. For home use the way is now embodied in a dentifrice called Pepsodent.

The results are known. Convincing, clinical and laboratory tests have proved them beyond question. Leading dentists everywhere now advocate its use.

A 10-Day Test Supplied

We now send a 10-Day Tube to anyone who asks. Thus we are starting countless people toward cleaner, safer teeth.

Pepsodent is based on pepsin, the digestant of albumin. The film is albuminous matter. The object is to dissolve the film, then to day by day combat it.

The way seems simple, but pepsin must be activated. The usual method is an acid harmful to the teeth. It is the invention of a harmless activating method which makes pepsin possible. That, with other Pepsodent ingredients, is doing now what was never done before.

Send the coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the slimy film. See how teeth whiten as the fixed film disappears.

Read the book we send you. Learn the reason for these things. Then judge for yourself if you want your teeth kept in that way always. Cut out the coupon now.

See how teeth glisten when the film is gone.

It is film that makes teeth look dirty. It is film that is the source of most tooth troubles.

HIS REWARD

He Got 20,000 Crowns for Killing Tizsa.

Budapest, Nov. 4.—A man named Erténykowski, one of the band which brought about the assassination of Count Stephen Tizsa, in November, 1918, today confessed to having fired the first shot, in the course of an investigation into the assassination of the former Premier. A former marine, named Dobo, admitted having received 10,000 crowns from War Minister Lindner after the murder was accomplished, and that two weeks later he received another 10,000 crowns from Secretary of State Lahnna. Dobo said, however, he was not aware if Lahnna knew why he was ordered to pay the money.

Next Year's Crop to be Bigger. Honolulu, Nov. 4.—Next year's sugar crop will be a record. General survey made of the four sugar-producing islands indicates that the crop will be 620,000 or 540,000 against 601,000 tons this year.
