LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson met Another Little Turning. John was as dear as ever to her, but she was not to be, to her mother, and she took to him immediately. John had the masculine virtues which involve a sense of protection to the weak. I am not sure, that had I been one of those women who was always looking for sympathy, always asking for help, always inefficient, one of the very few sort of women, we should not have been much happier than we have been.

Looking back on it now, I sometimes think I did cling a little during that three weeks of courtship. Perhaps if I could look into John's heart should find that I had been quite a much of a disappointment to him, he has been to me. Certainly I know one thing, and that is that no one could have been sweeter to my dear mother to the day of her death than John, when he was with her. In a recent play one of the characters said: "Why I was a youth in college I thought black was black and white was white, and now I know that it is neither black nor white, but just a splotchy gray," which is only another way of saying that none of us is wholly good and surely none of us is wholly bad.

That is the reason, I think, that I do not care for the plays or stories which make the villain so villainous, that you cannot see one whit of his whole character. However, I did believe at the time of mother's death that John was the most unselfish man in the world, although my mother, in her sweet way, tried to excuse him, and I think possibly John thought he was justified in leaving me to face alone the greatest trouble I had ever had up to that time.

John was very efficient. He consulted with the family doctor, arranged for the funeral that had been thought of before but which would make things much more troubling and comfortable for all of us. Late in the afternoon he received a telegram from his office. This he read hurriedly, and then said crisply:

"How much time have I to make the next train home?"

"For a moment I could not speak and then I thought that something terrible must have happened to John's mother."

"Is your mother ill, John?" I asked.

He looked at me impatiently. "No, dear, mother is never ill. What time did you say the next train leaves?"

"I didn't say, I—I don't think I know exactly."

Still, he did not tell me why he wished to know this, and I was so hurt and stunned that I could not possibly ask him why.

He left me standing there, perfectly mute, and walked down the path calling to the messenger, evidently to ask him if he knew what time the train left. I went slowly into the house. In a few moments John came up the stairs two steps at a time and still without a word began to jam collars and shirts into his valise.

I just sat quietly watching him. Even then it did not seem possible that John, who had been absolutely fearful in his sympathy when he took my little mother in his arms, should desert me in that troubled hour.

"Well, goodbye, girl," he said. "I've only half an hour to catch that train. I expect the taxi any minute."

"But John, where are you going?" I managed to ask.

"I'm going home immediately. They've called up a big deal at the office, and I've got to straighten it all out. Strange that a man can't leave his office five minutes without something going wrong."

"But, John—" I broke in.

"Oh, yes, I know, I know. But can't you think for a moment—can't you get it through your woman's head, that a man must consider it more necessary to make money that will keep his wife in comfort—"

"Then to help her bury her dead?" I interrupted. "If you are making this money only for my comfort, I don't want it as much as I would for the comfort of your companionship in my present need."

STOMACH DISORDER Only 6 Months To Live

READ WHAT B. B. DID FOR HIM.

Mr. Hans Kehli, Magnolia, Ala. writes:—"Some years ago I became very sick from stomach disorder which the doctor told me had started from drinking bad water. I tried local doctors, but finding I got worse from day to day I went to a doctor in Edmonton. He told me that I must have an operation, and that if I didn't I couldn't live any longer than six months. I told him I had better die after six months than be cut to pieces. I did not have the operation, but returned home. No one was there to meet me at the station, because they did not know I was coming. I felt as if I couldn't walk farther than 10 yards without resting. It took me 6 hours to walk 3 miles; the distance from the station to my home.

Some weeks later I read an advertisement about your Burdock Blood Bitters. After I had used one bottle I felt much better, and after I had used three bottles I was completely cured; therefore you see your B. B. has saved my life, and I cannot praise it too highly.

"Don't be foolish, girl. I am going to say goodbye to your mother now. Telegraph me after the funeral and I'll call you up on long distance tomorrow afternoon."

"You needn't do that, John. I don't think I'll be equal to talking to you on long distance."

"I shall call just the same. What is the use of being so timid? Do have a little sense, Kate. Goodbye, dear. When you come to yourself you will know that I am doing this for you and you only."

He bent down to kiss me and if I had been sentenced to death for not returning that kiss, I could not have done so. Perhaps I am wrong, but that was another turning point. Under similar circumstances nothing would have kept me from John's side.

I know mother felt that way too, although she tried to excuse him in her gentle way. But it is one of the very little things that I have never been able to forgive my husband, even though he gave me a wonderful diamond dinner ring as my particular share of the profits of that business deal.

Continued tomorrow.

PANNIER TO STAY

Every indication That it Will Continue in Vogue.

Small Bustle, Even, May Be Added to the Coming Season's Costume—Silk Fringes Seem to Be Losing Their Popularity.

The indications are that the pannier comes to stay and that some of the very best houses have even added the "vegetarian" or small bustle once a feature of our grandmother's toilette. One can imagine the charm of this revival—a graceful apparition in a softly lighted drawing room, a pretty young woman thus dressed—very short sleeves, flat bodice, adorable puffs at hips, a snappy little bustle—and a vision of the romantic past freshens and lives.

In our present day era of practical food sense I doubt if we will witness the re-ascendance of the pannier, but it cannot be denied that a number of the latest evening dresses show a decided tendency to encourage the use of the very wide stiffened skirt, crumpled by ruffles and large loops. The return of lace is undoubtedly at the bottom of this new craze for ruffles.

Silk fringes are gradually disappearing. They have been an overdose. Contrarily, neck pieces, put in the discard for hat trimming, have found their future as ornaments for dresses. Cheret shows us a model for evening wear made of silver cloth (tulle), covered in white chiffon and trimmed only by a girde of short cock plumes—a lovely Chinese blue, the girde formed by inserting the feathers, one by one, in the delicate folds of the chiffon.

Fringes of mousety fur are still fashionable. They are placed lengthwise, following vertical seams and lines. The newest and prettiest waist cords are made of great rosette bands, hand-painted in the coloring of the gown they are to accompany. This does not mean the exclusion of other girdles; and just here it may be said that last year's lovely style of using ropes of jet and like materials of the jet ornaments will be still very much in vogue. Some well-dressed women who do not like the new entirely furled and cleverly draped strands and loops of jet garnish their shoulders or gossamerly arranged with any of the hundred devices of the adroit dressmaker.

The wooden beads, however, will be more exclusive and original, because they are expensive, being carefully and artistically hand-painted. Chicago American.

FASHION'S FADE.

Nothing makes a prettier suit for a growing girl than tweed. Ball tassels finish the soft girde of some very pretty coats. Dark live satin and gabardine make a pretty combination.

Navy blue, black and the various shades of tan are the fall colors. Suits and girdles are still the most important points of tailoring. Children are now more deeply dressed than they have ever been. Collars and cuffs are sometimes lined with ribbons of a becoming shade. Little girl's girdles are of narrow ribbon tied in a soft bow in front. Make the bias come from the front edge of the skirt's waistline. There are many fads and gossamerly about some of the new evening frocks.

More Color Wanted. The feeling for color, a tendency to warm, home and more satisfying coloration in clothes, is in the air.

Mrs. Robert Eaton has sold her home in Melville to John R. French. This will make a most desirable residence for Mr. and Mrs. French, being situated so conveniently to their mill property.

Tobacco Habit Dangerous

Dr. Conner, formerly of Johns Hopkins Hospital, thousands of men suffering from fatal disease could be in perfect health to-day were it not for the deadly drug, tobacco. One of the habits now before it is too late. It is a simple process to get rid of the tobacco habit in any form. Try to get up to state drug store and get some Nicotol Tablets; take these as directed, and in 10 days the poisonous habit will be broken. Dr. Conner's Nicotol Tablets are sold in this paper. It is the danger of nicotine poisoning. I have to avoid it. In the meantime try Nicotol Tablets; you will be surprised at the result.
