GOSWOLD'S Oriental Cream

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

Listening to the Tempter. I am sure I deceived nobody but my mother when I said I had lost the check, for Charlie said hastily--too hastily:

"The check will turn up sometime. Until then I can let you have whatever you need."

"Oh no!" I answered quickly, quite breathless. "I will just telegraph my husband to send me some by wire." And then I stopped, for I realized that I had almost told them that I had lied about the check. Poor little innocent mother said, anxiously:

"No, I won't do that, Kathie, you don't want your husband to think that you are so careless as to lose his check."

Even Mr. Hicks came to my rescue at this.

"Surely it would not be strange if Katherine lost a check during this tragic time. My mother, Burke, you have about a thousand dollars in the bank and I will be glad to take your check as executor for your husband. I will draw enough to pay your bills."

"Then Kathie you need not telegraph your husband, because I can let you have some money," said my mother, almost happy again.

"I will wire him," I answered decisively.

"Write it out, Kate, and I'll send it for you," said Charlie.

Was it my imagination or was there a little sneer at the corner of his mouth? I knew that he knew that I had lied. And he knew that I knew that he knew I had lied. But like conventional human beings, we still went on playing the game, and my anger at John made me stick to my first falsehood and vehemently lie all the more to make my first lie "good."

"Oh, John will be so sorry," I said, "that he had to rush off in such a hurry that he couldn't cash the check for me while he was here. But I guess it's just as well, for you see I might have lost the money instead. I didn't know that I was so careless. You can't imagine how many things I have lost since my marriage."

"Yes?" said Charlie dryly, as he turned toward the window and carelessly lighted a cigarette. This time I did not mistake the sneer at the corner of Charlie's mouth and I knew it was not for me. He realized, as well as I, the many, many things that I had lost since my marriage.

"Oh, it isn't necessary to send the telegram," said mother hastily, for she seemed to sense a strained moment. "I'll just write a check for five hundred dollars and we will pay up all the bills. Your father, Kathie, never liked bills."

Mother was all a flutter at the unexpected business thrust upon her. I determined to talk to Charlie about leaving her alone and I had a shrewd idea that Sarah knew more about the business matters of the household than mother. For I was perfectly aware that father was one of those old-fashioned men who imagined he was doing the best possible thing for his wife when he surrounded her with every comfort and kept her sheltered from the world. I believe my mother had been perfectly happy. Her one thought was her husband. She had no other life but his. Would I be happier if I could bring myself to feel that everything John did was right and it was my life to live within the bounds of his desire?

The modern woman cannot do this. Perhaps this is the reason why divorce is so prevalent. We break away because we know that we can support ourselves. I know that tomorrow if I should leave John I could qualify as a gymnasium instructor and sportswoman.

Just before I left home to come to my father's house I made John very angry one night by assisting at our mothers and grandmothers were not any less unhappy than we daughters of modern days. I said the reason there were more divorces nowadays than there used to be was, not because the modern woman is more restless, and more exigent than her mother was, but because her mother did not know where to turn to earn her daily bread if she left the household of her husband.

John said most peremptorily: "You don't know what you are talking about! Every woman should understand that there must be a head to a household, even if that household is a business, as you new women are so fond of calling it."

It never entered his mind that the household head might be a woman. By the time we had reached this point in the conversation, I was too tired and unhappy to press my point.

But to get back to the telegram from John. With woman's intuition I knew just what Charlie Goodwin would say to me if I asked him to go with me to send the wire. I know he would tell me again that I had no man who cares for a woman could see her pass through what I had been going through and be able to keep silent.

Under ordinary circumstances I should have considered myself a traitor to my husband to let Charlie tell me this, but as it was I had a feeling that I should like to know just how the "other man" would treat this situation, and I said:

"Come on Charlie, walk down to the station with me while I send the wire to my husband."

RED ROSE TEA "is good tea"

THE British are noted as great tea drinkers and are naturally good judges of tea. So when we learn that over 70% of the tea used in Great Britain is Indian tea we can be sure that Indian tea is of the very best quality. In Canada the preference for Indian tea has become just as strong, as evidenced by the success of Red Rose Tea which consists chiefly of ASSAMS—the richest and strongest of Indian teas. Red Rose is always sold in sealed packages.
