CANADIAN RUGBY RULES ARE SUPERIOR

Coach Frank Shaughnessy Disappointed in Style of American Game.

Coach Frank Shaughnessy, of the McGill rugby squad, has returned from New York, where he witnessed the game between the Army and Navy. Coach Shaughnessy was convinced by the style of play in the game that the Canadian rules are superior to those of the United States. He said that there was not a kicker on either team who compared with the backs of the two local champion teams.

In Shaughnessy's opinion, King, who won the game for the Navy by his kicking, was not out of the ordinary. He cannot kick as far or as accurately as any of the backs of the M.A.A.A. or McGill teams, according to the McGill coach.

In speaking of the rules, Shaughnessy said that he could only find one or two that would improve the Canadian game. He believes that a reduction in the number of players would be an improvement, while he thinks the snapback is a better and faster way of putting the ball into play than the present heeling out system of the Canadian game.

Shaughnessy also believes that if the placement rule was adopted and fostered by Canadian teams, it would open up the play and make the game more spectacular. These changes will likely be offered by McGill at the annual meeting of the Intercollegiate Rugby Football Union.

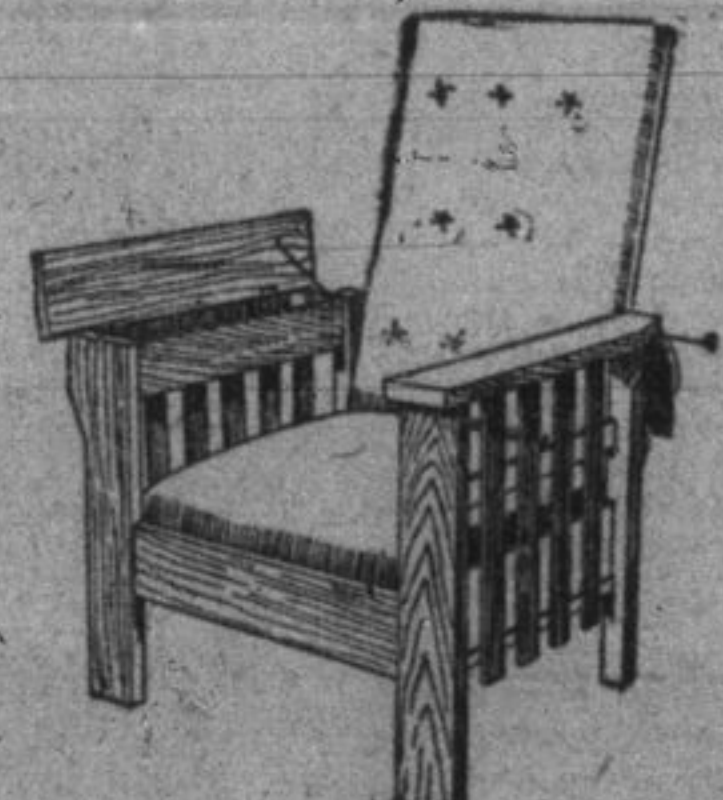

Regarding the forward pass, Shaughnessy held that in his opinion it was a dismal failure. It was tried on several occasions during the game and the teams were unsuccessful in their efforts to pull off plays hinging on a forward pass.

He also suggested that the penalty for offside interference be changed, so that a side offending would not lose possession of the ball on the first or second down, but should be penalized fifteen yards. On the third down the team offending should lose possession of the ball.

Shaughnessy will now resume his work with the McGill hockey players. He started the forwards at shooting practice in the gymnasium yesterday, by having them shoot at a target from about the distance that shots would be made on the ice.

Charles A. Comiskey having repudiated the wild tale that any bolt from the American League ever was contemplated by himself, Harry Frazee and Jacob Ruppert, and Frazee having denied that he originated the story, the mystery is: Who gave the New York newspaper writers the tale out of which they got such a big laugh? Comiskey says no such scheme of a new major league as was published was ever broached in his hearing during his conferences with Ruppert and Frazee.
