Two-Party Line Telephone Service

NCESSARY curtailment of new construction during the war, followed by the unprecedented development since the armistice, have resulted in a universal shortage of telephone material.

In order to utilize our supply of equipment to the best advantage, to reduce delay in installations to a minimum, and to avoid refusing service to anyone, we ask those intending to order telephones to consider the advantages of two-party line service.

With the central energy system in use here the operator can ring either of the telephones on a two-party line without disturbing the other. The cost to the user is substantially lower than for individual line service.

The rate for two-party line service is, for Business telephones $26.40, and for Residence $22.00 per annum.

We will be glad to furnish full information to anyone interested.

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

An Invitation to Dance.
I was very glad to stumble into a wheeled chair for my return to the hotel. The board walk was swarmed with people, and much to my surprise Helen saw many of her old friends. Although they all know the circumstances of her marriage to Bobby Gaylord, most of them were very cordial in their greetings.

"I wonder if Bobby's money has anything to do with Gladys Charteris warm welcome?" said Helen to me.

"Don't get cynical, Helen," I hastened to admonish her. "Take your friends for just what they give you, and remember that time erases everything."

"Everything, but prejudice," said Helen softly.

"It sometimes softens even prejudice," I insisted. "You know the old saying that the only changeless thing in this world is change."

"Then why should we cling to the old things. Why not accept this dictum of incessant change and make the best of it?"

"I am going to try to," I answered.

"That's a brave resolve," was Helen's comment. "Guess I'll do the same. I suppose it's just a case of not being able to eat your cake and have it, too."

"A man would say, Helen, 'What is cake good for if not to eat?'"

Sours on the World.
"Yes," laughed Helen, "and a woman says: 'I'm going to save mine for some future day when I'm hungrier for cake than I am now.' Then if it gets moldy and hard in keeping, she mourns the loss and sours on the world."

I laughed with Helen.

Thus skirting the real issues, making no confidence and asking none, but understanding each other perfectly, we rode back to the hotel.

"Would youse ladies like to hit 'ma cha' by de day?" The little darky's white teeth gleamed. He had evidently enjoyed our laughter, too.

"Yes," Helen answered quickly, as she handed him a tip. "We'd like to have the use of your chair by the day while we stay. You can come to the hotel at 9 o'clock in the morning and we will give you the orders for the day."

For the first time since I was married I had a little glow of pride because I knew it would be possible to pay my half of this expense without having to ask anyone for the money.

To my surprise, I had a splendid appetite for dinner. Helen looked like a dream in a simple white chiffon evening dress, and I wore my favorite green with frosted silver.

Tender Smile on Her Lips.
When she came out of her room and we met in the hallway, I saw her tucking away in the envelop of a telegram in her low corsage, while a tender smile hovered about her lips.

"Just a short message from Bobby," she said. "It makes me feel better if it lies next my heart."

A cold hand seemed to clutch mine at the words of the telegram, but that moment a bell boy handed me a flower box. I opened it to find another great bunch of white violets. There was no card.

"Oh," exclaimed Helen, "they will just complete your costume. I am not sure but that John's way of expressing his loneliness is better than Bobby's."

Again I let her think that John had sent the flowers, although I was more than sure that I knew whence they came.

I really did not want to wear them but had no way of refusing to pin them on my gown because Helen, thinking they were from John, would mentally accuse me of being cold or ungrateful.

The flowers, dear innocent things, did add much to my costume, and Helen and I had the satisfaction of knowing that we created rather a sensation as we entered the dining room.

Surprised to Be Happy.
The food tasted the best to me of any I had had since my illness, and I was quite surprised to realize how happy I was and how little the state of affairs with John affected me.

A man friend of Helen's and Bobby's made his way to our table and asked us if we would accompany him to one of the hotels to dance that evening. He said Bobby had sent him a long telegram that day, asking him to look out for us.

"I didn't know how much Gaylord was putting me in his debt," he said, with a courtly bow. "I shall be the devil in the hotel," he added.

It was so long since I had heard the little flatteries of polite society that my spirits leaped at the sound.

"I will be happy in spite of anything that life may hold," I whispered to myself—an unconsciously carrying hand to my forehead as the fragrant white violets lay before me.

Tomorrow—Helen's Happiness.

AN OTHER-WORLD VISITOR

The International Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 22nd is "Peter Delivered From Prison."—Acts 12:5-7.

By William T. Ellis.

Of a sudden, the world has been stirred over spiritualism, and the newspapers are giving as much attention to speculation and evidence concerning an existence beyond the grave as if the theme were as brand-new as the recent wireless disturbances which certain scientists straightway attribute to messages from Mars. (Some day a digger among the newspaper files will produce, by instances, such an indictment of the sensationalism and superficiality and cocksureness of "science" as will make us all turn again to faith in plain common sense.)

Sir Oliver Lodge is given a credence which is practically denied to Paul and Luke and the other New Testament chroniclers. Conan Doyle has been accorded a popular brevet rank as an authority upon the supernatural which gives him more temporary authority than John the Apostle, to whom the heavens were opened at Patmos. There are many other sensible persons who would rather listen to the trivialities of these recent proselytes to spiritualism, concerning ouija boards, slate-

Peter's body; the real Peter he could not touch. The prisoner slept on the stone floor of his cell that night more sweetly than Herod on his purple couch. Peace is not of the pillow, but of the pillowed.

"Stone walls do not a prison make, Nor iron bars a cage."

This would be an opportune occasion to recall the great souls who triumphed over bondage—Daniel, Peter, Paul, John the Beloved, John Bunyan, Samuel Rutherford at Aberdeen—what a fragrance of faith has filled the centuries from their prisons. Whenever we sing "The sands of time are sinking," with its refrain, "In Immanuel's Land," we should recall that it is only an echo from Rutherford's sea-girt prison.

Most of us are shut in by some sort of imprisonment or other; by some of us settle down to the deadened life of convicts; whereas God means us to be free, in spirit, if not in body. Only a morbid soul can delight in bars. Resignation is not the first of the Christian virtues; it belongs far down on the scale of faith, below courage and initiative and diligence. You may be sure that Peter was the sort who did not stop to argue with the angel about the spiritual benefits of imprisonment; he was ready to go free at the first touch of the angel's hand. The obedience and co-operation of Peter with the angel was fairly military.

A Man as an Angel.
At the time of the famous so-called "conspiracy case," when one hundred and twenty-five Korean Christians were in prison, a Korean missionary was at dinner in the home of an American newspaper man. She recounted the whole story vividly, and then said, with some degree of concern, "And, do you know, those simple-minded believers really expect that God will send an angel to open their prison doors, just as he did for Peter."

That evening, upon retiring, the newspaper man said to his wife, "I'd like to be that angel." Thereupon he began an elaborate and far-reaching propaganda which really freed the Christians, although only a few persons know the inside story of how world opinion was brought so overwhelmingly to bear upon the Japanese Government that it surrendered its plans respecting the Korean Christians.

That incident illustrates the principle made clear in the lesson story, that God never sends a celestial angel to do what a human servant can as well accomplish. The angel left Peter as soon as the otherwise insurmountable barriers were passed. God never does supernaturally what man may do of his own powers. There may be—doubtless are—ministering spirits sent from heaven on earthly errands, but most of God's messenger work on earth must be done by men and women, who thereby become his "angels," or "messengers."

Mightier Than Mediums.
While Peter slept in jail, the Jerusalem Christians, wide-awake, were assembled in the home of John Mark, praying. There is a direct connection between these supplicating saints and the freed apostle. Prayer reaches farther than even faith can imagine. Mightier than spiritualistic mediums in commanding supernatural resources is the simple prayer of faith. The person who is tempted to go to a medium better go to his knees. All barriers, of time and sense, are crossed by the prayer of faith. Julia A. Baker has put the thought into verse:

"Thou goest thy way, and I go mine,
Apart, yet not afar;
The pathways where we are,
'God keep watch' 'tween thee and me,
'This is my prayer';
He looketh thy way, He' looketh mine,
And keeps us near."

Childhood has no difficulties of faith. The maiden Rhoda, or Rose, answered Peter's knock at the door, and recognizing Peter's voice (always the most recognizable expression of a personality), for very joy of that and sense, are crossed by the company, crying her good tidings.

The assembled Christians could not at first believe that their prayers were answered. They were like that man who said his faith was so great that it could remove the neighboring mountain. He shut his eyes and prayed for its removal, and opening them, said, "There it is—just as I knew all the time it would be." How amazed most of us would be if our prayers were as actually and promptly answered as those of the Christians in the home of John Mark's mother in old Jerusalem!
