A Tailless Bow Kite

March winds will soon be blowing and kite-flying time will be here again. If we are going to have some new kites now is the time to begin work on them. A novel kind of kite that will distinguish itself among ordinary kites is "tailless bow kite," since it is a high flyer and is successful without a danfling cloth tail which has a habit of entangling itself in anything nearby.

To build a bow kite, get two sticks, each 5 ft. long, strong and limber. In cross-section, they should be 5% in. wide by 1/4 in. thick. Then get a sheet of light, strong paper about 5 ft. square. Set a small screw eye or large tack into each end of each stick. Spread the pa-per on the floor, lay one stick (DJ) along its middle, and the other (EF) across at right angles so that the crossing (H) is 8 in. below D. Fasten the sticks together securely by winding cord about the crossing (H). Run a cord from each screw to the next (D to E to J to F to D) tying it to each. Then mark the lines DE, EJ. JF, and FD on the paper. In cutting out the paper, cut along a line 1½ in. outside the marked line to provide a lap-over to be pasted over the strings to hold the paper to the frame.

The bow shape is made by bending the cross stick (EF). To do this run a cord from E to F so that it passes on the opposite side of the paper from the sticks. Then stand the kite on edge with E on the floor, press down on so as to bend the cross stick slightly toward the paper side, drawing up and fastening the cord at F to hold the bend. The bend should be enough to bring the string 6 in away from H. The flying string (A) should be attached to H. Another cord or belly tached to the flying string at B, about 8 in. away from the kite. After the belly band is in place, cut it in two in the middle and tie in a heavy rubber band (C) as shown. (Tomorrow: Hunting Eye visits an

A strong soap box will do very well.
Draw a diagonal line on each end so that you can saw it down to one half its height on one side. When you finish, you will have sloping sides, and a box that is half as high in front as in the back. Get an old window pane with the glass in to fit over this box, and screw it on with a pair of hinges fastened to the taller side of the bax. Filled with rich earth, this will force seedlings like magic.
