LOVE and MARRIED LIFE

by the noted author
Idah McGione Gibson

My Rescuer.
My wild impulse to leap into the raging waters and become a part of them was checked as much by the surprise I felt someone being near as by the detaining hand on my arm. For a moment I experienced the disagreeable sensation of awakening from a hideous nightmare. I glanced in surprise and astonishment at my rescuer and gasped:
"What are you, of all people, doing here?"
"What were you going to do?" she questioned, with repressed emotion. Then we both laughed somewhat hysterically.

Still keeping his hand on my arms, he gently guided me back toward the bench that stood in the center of the pier next to the lighthouse. Before we reached there I must have fainted, for when I came to myself I was lying on the bench, wet to the skin from the storm and rain. The face of the drenched man I saw bending over me was so white and drawn that I hardly recognized my friend—Karl Shepard.

Could Not Breathe.
Again I had the idea that I was dreaming, and I sat up suddenly and began to push my arms out about me, feeling that I could not breathe.

"You must sit quietly," said Karl, as he gently pushed me back. "I must get back to the hotel," I said hastily. "How did I get here? I can't remember."
"That is just as well," he answered. "Fortunately, I got here in time."
"In time for what?" I asked, stupidly.
"Why, don't you know what you were trying to do?"
By this time my mind was clearing and I could recall things vaguely.

"I only know that a great green wave was beckoning me from way out there," I replied, and I had said to it, "When you get near enough so that I can hurl myself upon your breast I will come to you."
Karl said nothing. He sat looking at me in utter despair.

"Don't think I'm insane," I said. "You certainly were at the time."
Harmless Means Of Reducing Fat

Many fat people fear ordinary means for reducing their weight. Here is an extraordinary method. Extraordinary because while perfectly harmless—no dieting or exercise are necessary. Marmola Prescription Tablets are made exactly in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription. A reduction of two, three or four pounds a week is the rule. Procure them from any druggist or if you prefer send $1 to the Marmola Company, 864 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich., for a large case.

I can not thank my stars enough that I was here."
"But you shouldn't be here," I admonished.
"It is foolish to think of conventions at a time like this," he said brokenly.

Troubles Would be Over.
"Perhaps," I answered, "but if you had obeyed the conventions my troubles would be over."
"But, Katherine, you magnify your troubles. They are not enough to induce you to attempt what you did. You are morbid, my dear, morbid."
"Not now. That impulse will never possess me again. But truly it was not that I was so unhappy. It was only that the great green wave beckoned."
Karl groaned.
"But what made you come down here," again I asked.

"Because something, I do not know what, told me that I should be needed, that you needed me. I did not intend that you should know that I was here unless some reason for it arose. I knew this morning, when I saw you leave the hotel in the teeth of the coming storm, that now would be the time that you needed me, and I followed at a safe distance. A moment more and I should have been too late! Oh, Katherine, Katherine, I cannot understand why you should attempt this terrible thing. It isn't like you."
"Karl, you do not know what it is like me, and what I am not like you."
"Yes I do; I know you better than you know yourself."
I laughed nervously. The same old sureness of understanding was his that is every man's that is interested in a woman. Karl Shepard did not know me any better or even as well as John did. He did know, however, and know very well, the woman that he had bulled out of his ideals and projected into my body. Since the world began lovers have said to each other, "I know you perfectly," and as soon as they fall out of love, it is "I do not understand you," or "you never have known me, you never will know me."

I was too shaken however, to discuss the matter with Karl, and so I beckoned to a wheel chair man, who came reluctantly, as he did not like to brave the rain. "Take me back to the hotel," I said.

Airman Got a "Sub."
One minute passed, two minutes, four minutes. We had reared over six miles of sea, and still I could see the little fountain ahead.

Then I saw the submarine. She was a mile away—a big grey Frits of the U-class, long flush deck rising toward the bows, conning tower between bow and stern, two guns, one before and one aft of the conning-tower, and a spright stem. She was showing through the water at top-speed, about thirteen knots, and above her bow was the little fountain.

It was caused by a thread of water running up her straight stem and leaping into the air about five feet. It glittered in the sun.

Two men were on the conning-tower, but they did not see or hear us coming. We were attacking up wind and down sun. We read part of her number, U47, but the second numeral was blurred.

Forty seconds after seeing the U-boat Dickey pulled the release lever and dropped one bomb. He threw up his arm. I banked over and looked down. The bomb had detonated on the starboard side half way between the conning-tower and the stern.

The submarine heeled slowly over to port. She stopped in her own length and began to sink.

Cuckney close behind me passed over. I saw a bomb burst on the starboard side right in front of the conning-tower. Her decks were now awash. An explosion occurred in her bow and several smaller explosions between the stem and the conning-tower.

By this time I was again in position and Dickey dropped a second bomb. The bomb detonated about thirty feet away from her. Only the very top of her conning-tower was showing, and then she vanished.

The little fountain had been fatal. —From Squadron Commander T. D. Hallam's new book, "The Spider Web," an account of his own share in fighting submarines in the North Sea. Commander Hallam is a native of Toronto.

Fur Shortage Rumored.
Short catches are being reported this year throughout the fur country of Northern Canada. A. Bassett, chief inspector of the Hudson Bay Co. Fur Trade Dept., said the other day that the catches received so far are the advance guard, sent out from the interior by natives in need of an immediate "grub stake." So far as he could judge, there will not be the absolute shortage of muskrat, which had been rumored, but rat undoubtedly would be scarce, as it had been for three years. Lynx, white sarco, might be expected to show a slight improvement over 1919, when it reached the lowest abb since 1916.
