How You May Have a Pretty Hairline for Newest Coiffure

By LUCREZIA BORI, The Famous Spanish Prima Donna

The fashion of wearing the hair smoothly back from the brow and rather close to the head has been revived through the affectation of this coiffure by a French actress noted for her beauty.

This coiffure is always distinguished, provided the wearer has a pretty hairline and a smooth, white forehead, not too high.

The "widow's peak"—as it is called—when the hair grows in a point on the forehead is an attractive feature that should be made the most of in arranging your hair if you possess this hairline.

Many women, even those with abundant hair, have hair that shows a tendency to thinness just above the temples. Hair inclined to thin around the forehead should be massaged in a rotary motion after the fingers have been dipped in crude oil to which a few drops of perfume

Your forehead will be found an important feature in making or in marring the success of the smooth, off-the-forehead coiffure. First, be sure that your eyebrows are in the line nature designed for them. If they are straight, don't attempt to arch them. Rather should you cultivate their glossiness and growth. If, however, stray hairs grow between your eyebrows or if refractory hairs grow out of place they may be extracted with a small pair of tweezers purchased at a drug store.

Massage your forehead each evening after dipping your fingers in a good massage cream. One that should keep your forehead smooth and white is made as follows:

Almond oil . . . . . 4 ounces
Spermaceti . . . . . 1 ounce
White wax . . . . . 1 ounce
Cucumber juice . . . . . 2 ounces

table use and chip them fine, pound them to a paste and extract their juice by squeezing through a jelly bag. Perfume with half a drachm of violet extract, and spermaceti, and adding the almond oil, pour in this cucumber juice and beat into a cream.

The close coiffure also requires special attention to the nape of your neck. Massage this part of your neck thoroughly with the above cream, working it around to the front of your neck until your fingers meet beneath your chin.

If you wear your hair "off your forehead" you should massage your hair around the edges of your scalp every night before beginning the general massage of your scalp.

GREY COUNTY'S CENTENARIAN.

She Saw the Coronation of Queen Victoria 82 Years Ago.

To celebrate one's hundredth birthday is not the good fortune of many people and to come to the hundred and fourth milestone still able to enjoy life and to be interested in the every-day affairs of the community is decidedly unique. Yet up in Grey County, near the town of Owen Sound, lives a little old lady who, on January 10, was 104 years of age. Her name? Why anyone from that district will tell you of Mrs. Ann Brown, of The Glen, Sydenham, Grey county's only centenarian, and who is said to be the only surviving witness of the coronation of Queen Victoria.

Born in the quaint old village of Topcliffe, in Yorkshire, England, her early days were spent in the quietness and seclusion of the little country town. Her earliest recollection is of her grandfather preparing a feast on the village green for the men of the Topcliffe Company of Regulars, just returned from campaigning against Napoleon Bonaparte in Belgium and France. The first venture from the protecting shelter of her grandfather's cottage was to the great city of London. When a dark-eyed young maid of twenty summers she went to visit her mother in the great city, traveling from Hull in one of the first steamboats. On arriving in London she found that everything was in a state of bustle and excitement in preparation for the coronation of the young Queen. Her step-father was an upholsterer in the employ of the royal family and, to please his step-daughter, secured a pass for her into Westminster Abbey to witness the ceremony of the coronation. On the great day, June 28, 1838, she took her place with hundreds of others inside the Abbey and waited breathlessly for the greatest event. According to Mrs. Brown the appearance of the Queen was rather disappointing. She had been picturing to herself a tall beautiful woman, and instead she saw a girl, two years younger than herself, rather short, and quite ordinary-looking.

In 1863 Mrs. Brown made another journey from her home in Yorkshire to visit the First World's Fair, promoted by Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's Consort, and held in the Crystal Palace, London. On the death of her husband in 1863, Mrs. Brown decided that she could better her fortunes in a new land. With indomitable spirit she set out with her five small children for Canada. For three years she resided in Owen Sound. In 1866 she took up 120 acres of land in the township of Sydenham, four miles from Owen Sound. Here she has lived ever since, often under disheartening and difficult circumstances. In spite of the primitive condition of the country she wrested a living from the soil and raised and educated her little family.

During the visit of the Duke of Devonshire to Owen Sound in June, 1918, His Excellency visited Mrs. Brown and chatted with her for some time. She is still quite active, goes about the farm, reads a little, and writes in a clear steady hand. During the war she knitted nearly a dozen pairs of socks for the local branch of the Women's Patriotic League. Her vitality is wonderful, and she has many friends in Grey County who hope that they may be able to congratulate her upon her 105th birthday.
