LOVE and MARRIED LIFE

by the noted author
Idah McGlone Gibson

What Karl wrote.
"I can not resist the impulse, my dear Katherine," the letter began, "of writing to you on the eve of my departure for France."
"I have been offered a consular post in that country and for many reasons, some of them perhaps known to you, I have decided to take it, at least for a while."
"I am going to try and fashion my own life on a little different line than I have been living. Perhaps when I return, my dear friend, I may bring with me a French wife, for I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in the world so useless and out of date as an unmarried man of my age."
Surely, I thought as I read this, the sight of Karl's friends who are married has not given him an impression of any beneficial condition that man enjoys in marriage. And then I eagerly scrutinized the letter to find just why he had written me that particular piece of news.

Period of Transition.
"If I were a woman, Katherine," the letter continued, "I do not think that I ever would marry, at least not until the status of wives had changed a little bit. Just now that status is in a period of transition and from what I can see the women are getting the worst of it. But it must be very nice for a man to have a pretty, clever woman that he can call his, whose very thought is for him, whose every act takes him into consideration and whose whole duty lies in his wish."
"And do you know, Katherine, that most of the wives I have seen among my friends have been women of this type. If a man is half way decent to a woman she will do her part. Most of them, poor things, are brave enough to try and make the best of their lives with no help from their husbands."
"I haven't any illusions about myself, my dear Katherine, but I do honestly believe that I could make a woman happier than most of my married men friends seem to have done, and I know that I shall try to deserve happiness myself before I ask for it."
"There are some things that a decent man may not say to a married woman, whatever his inclination."
"He can not tell her that he is sorry for her; he can not tell her that he thinks she is the bravest little woman in the world; he can not tell her that his sympathy is always and ever with her, and more than all, he can not tell her that every day he falls against the fate that did not bring him to know her sooner.

Queer Old World.
"I believe, Katherine, that many men feel this way in regard to many women, because I know that a man is not always attracted to a woman that might be his for the asking. It's a queer old world, my dear friend, and things get most awfully mixed up at times and that is the reason why I am going away. And that is the reason why I am going to try and find some woman that I can care for enough, respect enough and reverence enough to wish to make her the mother of my children."
"I can not tell whether I shall write you again. I can not hope for the joy of a word from you—it is best that I drop out of your life."
"I don't for a moment think that what I do or say, or care would influence you in any way, but I do know that what you say, do or care, would have the greatest influence on my life."
"Oh, I shall go on in the same old way, but I want you to know just what I am writing you. I think you have known it long ago, but some way I do not feel right to go away without making some declaration of my feelings toward you."

Might Think Letter Wrong.
"There are people who might think that this letter was very wrong—I have cared for John very much; we have been friends all through our boyhood, and I swear to you, Katherine, if ohn had been anything more to you than the selfish, masculine animal that he is, I would not have written this letter. But a man can not see a woman in such despair as I saw you that night when I caught you back from death and feel perfectly indifferent to her. Someone, something is greatly to blame for all this, and I hope that some day you may, at least, be happy again."

This letter I tore into tiny bits and calling in the nurse, I asked her to put it into the waste basket. I was frightened at my feelings. I did not dare ask myself what I would answer if Karl Shepard had given me his address.

TODAYS FASHION

By MME. FRANCES

This Lovely Dinner Gown Combines Jade Green Crepe Chiffon and Silver Lace.
Jade green crepe chiffon and silver lace unite to form a picturesque dinner gown. Silver lace contributes the kimono blouse laid over a cambric bodice of green chiffon trimmed in folds of silver cloth.
The belt of silver ribbon furnishes background for a bouquet of vividly colored hand-wrought flowers which is posed at the waistline.
The skirt consists of two deep bands of lace joined by several tracks of chiffon. At the top are draped squares of chiffon attached beneath the belt by the corners. This type of "volante" or flying trimming is exceedingly popular at present for "best" wear.

JLD ROSE SHANTUNG COSTUME

Of delicately colored, beautiful old rose Shantung silk is this charming "Palm Beach" outfit. The blouse is plum-colored satin brocaded with silver, while cords of silver emphasize the waistline of both the blouse and the coat.

HOW TO CLEAN YOUR SILKS

Remove Grease Spots by Holding Over Fire; French Chalk and Pressing Recommended.

A good way to get grease spots from silk, writes a correspondent, is to hold the spotted part over a warm fire, not hot enough to burn the silk, but hot enough to melt the grease; put a piece of blotting paper over the spot and then put a warm iron on the blotter.

A good method for cleaning black silk is this: Mix strong coffee and ammonia. Brush the silk thoroughly and then rub the liquid on with a soft cloth. Wind around a board to dry.

French chalk will remove some spots from silk. Rub the chalk thoroughly in the garment and let it stay there for a day or so. Then brush it out with a velvet brush.

Water spots can sometimes be removed by pressing the silk on the wrong side, with a piece of thin muslin between the iron and the silk.

If silk has lost its body and stiffness follow the method of a renovator: Boll an old, clean kid glove in water and sponge the silk with the somewhat sticky liquid resulting.

Whenever silk is pressed a sheet of tissue paper or a piece of thin muslin should be spread over the silk to prevent glazing. The silk should be placed with its right side toward the board, ironed on the wrong side.

If you are a martyr to style you get your punishment as you go along.
