HALF the charm of silken things lies in keeping them fresh and sweet. Moreover perspiration discolors and shortens their life. Why not wash them after every wearing?

It's delightfully simple. Use the pure, gentle, cleansing LUX suds. Make just a bowlful, anywhere, any time. Just dip them up and down—press out the water—rinse—iron with a warm iron—and it's done.

LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGione Gibson

Mary's Money.
I noticed, however, that John was determined not to find any fault with me on any subject, and again I blessed my baby, for I thought probably she would make him more considerate of me in the future as she was doing now.

"What are we going to do with this $25,000, Katharine?" asked John.
"Why, we are not going to do anything with it, John," I answered. "It is ours, it is Mary's."

"Don't you think we might put it into the new house and turn the house over to her?"
"I think it would look very strange to Charles. Are you hard pressed for money, John, so much so that you are worrying about the payments on the house?"

"No," answered John slowly; "it just occurred to me that it would be very nice to pay off the house immediately."
My heart sank, as I understood that this was not what John was thinking about at all. The thing that was uppermost in his mind was the fact that here was $25,000 belonging to some one of his family, and that as such he could dispose of it in any way he pleased.

To Invest It For Mary.
"What I would like to do with it, John, or rather what I would suggest being done with it is that we should ask Charles to invest it for Mary."
"I don't see why we should do that."
"Well, it would be a rather graceful thing to do. He intends it for Mary, you know."
"Well, it will be against my judgment to do anything of the kind with this check."
"And it is against my judgment," I retorted, "that either you or I have anything to do with the disposal of it."
"I can't understand, Katharine, why you are so averse to your husband having the management of any money that belongs to you or to your child."
"Simply because, John, when you get your hands on any money you look upon it as yours and you manipulate it in any way you please without consulting me; and worse than that, you never allow me access to it without your consent, which is always given very grudgingly."

"You are always harping on the question. I never could understand why a woman whose bills are all paid, as yours are, should need any money. I should think you would be glad to have some man pay your bills. If you only knew what hard work it was to make money I am sure you would be glad to have someone relieve you of the details in spending it. All you have to do is to go and buy what you want. Your credit is good anywhere?"
"Yes, I think my credit is good anywhere except with you, John."

New Woman Notions.
"Say, Katharine, are you going to get these new woman notions? I have heard enough of that sort of thing from Alice lately, and I have seen a good deal of her since she came home. Did you know she had gone into politics? I should think Tom would get so tired of hearing her tell of the principles and programme of her party, and what the women were going to do in the election, that he would apply for a divorce."
"If Alice wasn't such a pretty woman I don't believe any man would stand for her. She doesn't seem to understand that in the mind of the masculine sex a good complexion means more than a good argument. I don't want to argue with women. When I argue I want to sit down comfortably with a man where I can swear at him if necessary. I want to be able to tell him where he gets off. But when I talk to a woman I want to compliment her and have her flatter me."

"In other words, you want airy perillage and flattering lies from a pretty woman's lips and cold logic and stern facts when you talk with a man."
"Yes, that's the idea perfectly—variety is the spice of life, you know."
I turned impatiently. Such talk was an insult to my intelligence. Tomorrow—The Old Struggle.
